The "tourist season" is now practically closed. I believe our visitors have not been quite as numerous as they were last year; but many have been here. Jamaica is becoming more widely known as a health resort. A lady and gentleman from Colorado called on me last week. They expressed themselves as greatly delighted with the climate and scenery, and said that Florida was nowhere near it in either respect. And yet they had not seen the best by any means. Tourists bring some money. It would be a great blessing if they brought more religion. This even some professing Christians seem to leave behind. Especially is this noticeable in their too great disregard for the Lord's day. It is often a matter of thoughtlessness, I suppose, but shows, too, a want of principle. They also lose good and an opportunity to do good. I advise any of your readers (or even the respected Editor himself) who want a delightful and healthful trip next tourist season to come this way.

Paul Hugh de Venter's Campaign.

By John W. Ellis.

In old Socommon state and the county of Wait,

The political pot was in great ebullition;
And some people perplexed, with their righteous souls vexed,

Said the county was doomed, by misrule, to perdition

Unless Paul Hugh de Venter would as candidate enter.

And retrieve their affairs from corruption and boodle;—

As a racer they'd groom him, and in mass meeting boom him,

With a band playing Dixie and then Yankee Doodle!

Hugh de Venter declared their opinions he shared;

That he long had observed naught but evil portends;

That since office had sought him, and since no one had bought him,

He declared he was now in the hands of his friends;

Said he'd not buy a vote, nor invest he a groat

In red whisky or beer, nor in things of such nature.

Which he counted a sin; though he knew he would win.

He would not buy a vote for the state legislature.

When the campaign ablaze, turned the nights into days

With its doors open free, it was then the machine

With its wheels so well juiced, startling wonders produced

In the raising of votes from the seen and unseen;—

So that teachers and preachers opposing the "screechers,"

Knew that "something was doing," they hardly knew what.

When the ballots were counted, the total amounted

To—no matter. The stuff—was it Fate?—
cast the lot.

In the country and city, caucus work and committee

Rolled a barrel well filled which the bosses displayed,

For they well understood where "'twould do the most good"

In the lighted saloon or the barn's darker shade.

Later people much wondered, since the ballots outnumbered

Those entitled to cast them, just how it was done.

Some declared the boys wet 'em as fast as they'd get 'em,

And if twenty stuck fast, they were voted as one!

Hugh de Venter's pure eyes opened wide in surprise

At the very few votes which for him had been cast,—

"'Twas an avalanche fell!" Others said, "It was hell

Broken loose with its legions all marshaled and massed."

My opinion's the first—in the other not versed—

For I'm told Hugh de Venter, snowed under so deep,

Was so lost that no trace in the snow showed a place

Where his friends could in grief gather round him and weep.

The Story of a Modern War.

"A Modern War for Independence" is the graphic story of one of the greatest commercial wars of history told by Ida M. Tarbell in the June McClure's, in her "History of the Standard Oil Company." Miss Tarbell describes the twenty years' fight of the independent oil men against the Standard and her narrative of the struggle is, indeed, as "powerful as the most stirring relation of battle on land or sea." With every weapon at its command in plot and counter-plot, attacks on front, flank and rear, ambush, treachery and deceit, evidently on the theory that all is fair in war, the Standard has waged unceasing war on all who have refused it allegiance and submission.

Mr. Rockefeller's one irreconcilable enemy in the oil business has always been the oil producer. Stripped of his legitimate profits by the marketing methods of the Standard, the producer has waged constant war in some form and place for his commercial rights and a fair share of the profits. The longer the glaring inequality in rewards was suffered the more bitter grew the resentment of the oil religion, intensified by the high-handed methods of the Standard towards every small competing enterprise, refinery, pipeline or oil jobber. The various schemes and organizations devised to combat the Standard are described by Miss Tarbell in detail. The efforts of the producers to market their oil independently, led to the fiercest warfare. The building of independent refineries and pipe-lines was undertaken against the keenest and most resourceful opposition, and with varying failure and success. Everything seemed to operate for the Standard.
Railroads and legislatures lent their powerful aid to thwart the efforts of the independents. Men important to the cause of the struggling oil men died at critical moments. Their markets were destroyed and their money lost in vain efforts to put the oil business on a fair competitive basis.

Miss Tarbell points out many significant lights of national importance which this conflict has thrown on the Standard Oil Trust. It indicates the trust's conception of "legitimate business," which does not seem to be much of an improvement in ethical quality on that of buccaneering times.
It shows the widespread power over the railroads possessed by the trust, which at a mere intimation compels favorable action. It reveals an even more ominous power over legislatures, and, most alarming of all, the power of controlling the markets by arbitrarily fixing prices and supply.

Miss Tarbell concludes her significant article with this pertinent comment:

"Altogether this story shows a combination of powers of such variety, subtlety and strength that the most conservative may well ask whether it is wise to allow them to any body of men. Certainly such sweeping powers have long ago been taken away from statesmen and churchmen. It seems reasonable to ask whether it is safer to allow them to men inspired only by greed and love of the game than to those who, to a degree, at least, are inspired by public interest or the advancement of religious ideas."

Pure Milk Rare.

Milk is not only milk. It may carry filth and germs of disease. In fact, absolutely pure milk is practically unknown. With the refining of all our ideals of living, clean milk has come to be as much of a necessity as clean water or clean meat. The producing of clean milk is a new business. Very few persons, relatively speaking, are engaged in this business. The business is yet in its experimental stage; that is, it is yet scarcely on a commercial basis for any great number of men. But how greatly this subject is developing may be judged from the fact that a certain man of thorough education, high culture and the best of social connections is now devoting his attention, as a professional business, largely to the planning and building of cow stables and barns, with his office on Fifth avenue.—*Country Life in ## June.

Come, with thine old-time witcheries of life,
Oh, thou full-breasted mother, hasten thee,
Lest on some wintry-weary sense there fall
Too late thy rose, and humming of thy bee!

So late thou art! Through many pulsing days
We heard thy tread in heart of earth and tree,
And felt thy breath until each leafing vine
Yearned for thy sensuous touch to make it free.

Through barren months, all bleak and cold and gray,
We watched, like children through the muffled pane,
A tender signal from a beckoning hand,
But only saw frost-flowers through the rain.

Come, coax the shyest blossoms of the year!
Bless us, sweet mother! Make the palest smile,
And, with our storm-roughed cheeks against thy breast,
Give us thy beauty for a little while.

No changelings call thee, for our hearts are thine;
Thou holdest that which keeps all things in tune,—
Rose leaves and kisses, love and life's red wine,— Oh, golden-hearted, peerless, perfect June!
—Virginia Frazer Boyle, in the June Century.

A Delightful Japanese Art.

Among the many delightful arts and studies of the Japanese none is more strange, unique and ancient than that of their training, cultivating and dwarfing of certain varieties of their flower-bearing trees. They seize upon certain peculiarities of the tree, and emphasize or exaggerate this trait even to the point of caricature. They aim to express delicate meanings which a western imagination could scarcely grasp; as, for instance, laboriously training certain types of trees to convey the idea of peace, chastity, quiet old age, connubial happiness and the sweetness of solitude.

While essentially artistic, Japanese gardeners do not seek for rare flowers or trees, however beautiful they may be, but rather cultivate the cherry, the plum, azalea, japonica and other common flowering trees, and train these into the rarest of shapes, making festivals of their blossoming-time, and placing fairy plum and cherry trees in pots in the guest-chamber as a token of hospitality. The cultivated flowers of Japan are the wild flowers, and the cultivated trees are those most commonly known and understood.

It would seem that the same perverse order of things obtains in their culture of dwarf trees as in everything else Japanese. Where westerners would train their trees to grow tall and straight and symmetrical, the Japanese fix upon a motif, and laboriously, patiently and systematically adapt nature to their own design, until the tree is twisted and distorted from its original plan, and slowly follows their conception to perfection. The process sometimes covers hundreds of years, being handed down from generation to generation, for this precious labor cannot be accomplished by one man or one generation. When the design is developed by the exposure of the root it can only be done at the rate of a quarter of an inch a year. Many of the designs are developed by grafting various kinds of trees upon one root, or planting more than one tree in a garden and training the roots and branches together.

The Japanese exhibit the same exquisite veneration for age in trees as in people, and a favorite conceit is the training of the plum-tree, so rugged and gnarled and knotted with its slender shoots and sparse studded arrangement of flowers, that it typifies admirably the contrast of bent or crabbled age with fresh and vigorous youth, best displayed when the tree is in bud.
—Onoto Watanna in the June Woman's Home Companion.

A Portable Y. M. C. A. for Lumbermen.

The lumber interests of the south, which are being developed by companies controlling great tracts of forests and employing thousands of men, have followed the example of the railroads and called upon the Young Men's Christian Association to lead in the organization of their employees for their own personal benefit, co-operating financially and materially. The Arkansas lumber company at Stamps, and the Pearl river company at Brookhaven, Miss., have already erected buildings at their new mill towns, which have sprung up as by magic. The association provides the only social center of the town, and has secured the membership of a large percentage of the employees. It is a common meeting place for social, educational, recreational and physical advantages. The Pearl river company has provided a movable building which can be lifted, like other camp buildings, by great cranes onto flat cars and transported to the different points where the men are cutting. In this portable building are supplied bathing, reading, social and amusement rooms, entertainments and religious services. The company employs some hundred men at the cutting camps and nearly a thousand in the mill and shipping towns. Other lumber companies have applied to the international committee for assistance in organizing similar associations at their lumber towns and camps.

Literary Milk for Russian Babes.

Of authors outside of Russia, according to a recent voting contest among Russian school children, Guy de Maupassant led all the rest, with the respectable total of 86 admirers; then followed Erckmann-Chatrian, Zola, Dickens and Hugo; and just inside the breastwork fell Goethe and Schiller, with 52 votes apiece. Shakespeare and Cervantes, as well as Ibsen and Daudet, straggle along, hopelessly out of the race, with less than fifty to do them reverence.

But it is bewildering to find even the children of Russia so terribly up-to-date! Those sensitive souls who bewail the crassness of American Philistinism should turn their eager eyes toward the north. Maupassant and Gorki are certainly no milk for babes. While their extreme popularity in Russia demonstrates a rather complete intellectual emancipation among the boys and girls, from the moral point of view our only comment, like Quintilian, is to stare and gasp.—William Lyon Phelps in June Book-lovers Magazine.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Now, don't throw down the paper because there is no Green Witch in it this week. I have something very important to tell you. Green Witch wouldn't make a shadow by the side of what I want to say. Besides, what did you do when there was no Green Witch? The continued story will be resumed next week, and remember you have to wait a whole month to read some continued stories. Of course they are not Green Witches, but they are doing the best they can, so don't let's draw comparisons. I want to tell you about a little boy named Charlie, and you'll find out why, if you stick to this article. When Charlie was a baby, his father deserted him—went away and was never heard of any more, and I'm sure I wouldn't want to hear from him now, would you? So that's enough to say about him! But how grateful we ought to be that our fathers stood by us when we were in our cradles, and how sorry we should feel for those who are cruelly abandoned. So Charlie was left with his broken-hearted mother, too young to understand what sorrow and disgrace was, to wear her life away. Now, a man who could desert his wife and child could strike them, too, and abuse them. Perhaps it was from a drunken blow, or from an injury inflicted in a moment of passion, that Charlie was seriously injured. It was necessary, at last, to have one of his legs cut off, just above the knee. I cannot tell you how the mother toiled and saved, denying herself even the necessities of life, in order to send him to some hospital, that his life might be saved. Perhaps the story is told in the simple fact that she died—it was only three years ago—and the boy, whose leg had been amputated in a Kansas City hospital, was sent to an orphans' home in Indian territory. Here he remained a time, till it was thought he might be taken care of by some family. He was sent away, and found himself among strangers, none of whom cared for him, or were willing to take some of their love and means from their own children, to give a homeless wanderer. It was not because it was any harder-hearted than any other towns. I am perfectly devoted to Plattsburg where I've lived since a child, but if I were an orphan here without a cent or a cousin, I'd just say to myself, "Good-bye, Mr. Breck!"

What is pure religion? Doesn't the Bible say it's to visit the widow and the orphan? Well, the people in the town didn't know what to do with little Charlie, except they knew they didn't want him, so there seemed nothing for it but to send him out to the poorhouse. That is what they decided to do. It wouldn't have been a very cheerful place to visit the orphan, when they had put him there, and were exercising their pure religion. When I began this true history, to you, I wrote the name of that town, but I've scratched it out, for fear they mightn't like what I am saying, because it is so true, and some day I might want to be state senator, for a man never knows what he will come to when everything goes wrong. Charlie isn't the only helpless one I've known of who was allowed to go to the poorhouse—just think! Out there with the paupers and feeble-minded—desolate, pitied and looked down upon, and a big fine church ringing its bell every Sunday morning! Maybe this is what the Advance Society is for, after all, to help a little bit in church work, or at least in orphan work, while the churches, it may be, are straining every nerve to get up a big strawberry social, or hold a red-and-blue-button contest.

There was a man in that Missouri town—you might as well know his name, for I think you would like him—at least I do, though I haven't seen him, and never heard of him except one time—who didn't want Charlie to go to the poorhouse. So Mr. Hughes—that's he, and not him, which would be bad grammar—wrote to the St. Louis Orphans' Home, to see if he couldn't get it to take the waif. The committee of the Home hesitated on account of the boy's age, for Charlie is now twelve. But they consented, bless their hearts! and he is there now. "He is a nice looking boy," Miss Tena writes (she's the matron), "clean, sweet, gentle, refined. He is proving himself a blessing by his disposition and example. As he seems to have some musical talent, we think of trying him first in that, and a young lady is giving him music lessons free. Since he can't work like the other boys, we expect to give him hours in our office, where he can fold papers, write addresses, stamp letters, etc." When my father went down to the opening of the World's Fair, of course he visited the Orphans' Home. He was very much pleased with Charlie, who acted as his guide, showing him the rooms and explaining how the orphans live.

Now that's Charlie. Now this is about Little Joe. What do you think? He's gone! One day a letter came telling me that he had been adopted into a good, refined family, which heard of him through our page. Thus, though the Advance Society has been in the orphan business only seven months, it has been so fortunate as to secure a mother and father for a child whose own mother and father cast it upon the world. Are you not proud to have helped in this work with your dimes, quarters and stamps? So now we have no orphan. As our money is not all spent, I could take another child and write about it, and no doubt find it a home in a short time. But I've decided to take Charlie under our wing. You know it will be very unlikely that he can find a home to adopt him, so we will have him, I suppose, a long time—till he is old enough to support himself. We will miss Little Joe, but we can't be sorry he has a happy home and fond foster-parents. He will grow up surrounded by love and plenty, and we have had something to do in bringing this about. But Charlie, we can expect to have with us several years. We can help buy his crutches, furnish his clothes, and his one shoe, keep him in crutch-rubbers, give him a two-weeks' visit to some country home in the summer, pay his way to the Fair,—he is right there, you know,—and in short prove a blessing to him. so I have written to the Home that we will adopt Charlie; I hope you are willing. I'd like to hear from you about it.

I haven't had a chance, yet, to print the names of all who have sent money to our orphan, but I am proud to tell you it is still coming in—mighty slow, however, mighty slow! Still, it is coming. The names of every giver will be printed in time. Harry and Burleigh Cash, Hood River, Ore., sent 50 cents, just after enjoying the smallpox; they wished the society a happy new year, and it isn't too late to tell you, because we can begin the year any day. M. Emily Day, Sparta, Mo., sends 25 cents, and a letter which I'll publish later. Erle Badford Brown, Francesville, Ind., writes: "I am 10; my sister Dorothy and I finished our first quarter. I intended writing that day, but played too much. The ground was all covered with ice in the morning, and it poured down rain all day. I went out to skate, and somehow my feet got ahead of me, and the next thing I knew I was sitting in the water. I had lots of fun, but it was cold. The next day it was 14 degrees below zero. I like to go to school." (It must be pretty stiff on spring gardens in your locality! Oh, I see, this was written last December; I understand, now!) Bessie Knowles, Du Bois, Neb.: "Once I kept the Av. S. rules four weeks, and found I had been leaving out the poetry! But I just am going to keep them now! I have a cat named 'Snowball.' She is very mean and will not let me pet her the least bit. I am trying hard to learn to skate. I am 13. I send 10 cents for Little Joe. I am so glad our orphan is from the United States. Is this too long?" (Yes, too long getting printed; hope you'll excuse me. I am not surprised that you find it difficult to skate. You'd better go where's there an ice-plant. As to Snowball, I am sure you do not understand her disposition. If she is really mean, it is because her youth was embittered by somebody's rubbing her hair the wrong way or pulling her tail—and I wish their hair had been pulled as a punishment. No cat is naturally mean, except, of course, a wild-cat and one other kind concerning which the less said the better. Perhaps you do not go about petting Snowball in the right way. I'll tell you how to make her as gentle as my own Felix. Sit down on the floor and say "Kittie, kittie, kittie," in the sweetest tones you have. Of course she won't come near, but that doesn't matter. Don't throw anything at her because she crouches up against the door trying to squeeze out through the crack. Get a saucer of milk and put it on the floor, and go 'way off and let her lap. Then open the door and let her go. In a week that cat will be rubbing her hairs all over your clothes, especially if you are dressed up. Remember, you are never to force your attentions upon her. Don't try to catch her to pat her. How would you like to be chased across the yard and then squeezed tight? But if you do try to take her up, and she runs away, don't dance up and down on the porch to make her run faster. # AS A BEACON LIGHT!

Vitae-Ore points the way for storm-tossed sufferers to a haven of Health and Comfort. If you have been drifting in a sea of sickness and disease, towards the rocks and shoals of Chronic Invalidism, Port your Helm ere it be too late; take heed to the message of Hope and Safety which it flashes to you; stop drifting about in a helpless, undecided manner, first on one course and then another, but begin the proper treatment immediately, and reach the goal you are seeking by the route so many have travelled with success. Every person who has used Vitae-Ore is willing to act as a pilot for you; each knows the way from having followed it; attend their advice, follow the light and be cured as they have. Can you afford to disregard it?

SENT ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

You Are To Be the Judge!

READ OUR SPECIAL OFFER

WE WILL SEND to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST or worthy person recommended by a subscriber or reader, a full-sized One Dollar package of VITAE-ORE, by mail, postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and dopes of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. Read this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good and not before. We take all the risk; you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. Vitae-Ore is a natural, hard, adamant, rock-like substance—mineral—Ore mined from the ground like gold and silver, and requires about twenty years for oxidation. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, and one package will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful, efficacious water drunk fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which there is nothing added or taken from. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases as Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Blood Poisoning, Heart Trouble, Dropsy, Catarrh and Throat Affections, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Ailments, Stomach and Female Disorders, La Grippe, Malarial Fever, Nervous Prostration and General Debility, as thousands testify, and as no one, answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using. Vitae-Ore has cured more chronic, obstinate, pronounced incurable cases than any other known medicine, and will reach such cases with a more rapid and powerful curative action than any medicine, combination of medicines, or doctors' prescription which it is possible to procure.

Vitae-Ore will do the same for you as it has for hundreds of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, if you will give it a trial. Send for a $1 package at our risk. You have nothing to lose but the stamp to answer this announcement. We want no one's money whom Vitae-Ore cannot benefit. You are to be the judge! Can anything be more fair? What sensible person, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, who desires a cure and is willing to pay for it, would hesitate to try Vitae-Ore on this liberal offer? One package is usually sufficient to cure ordinary cases; two or three for chronic, obstinate cases. We mean just what we say in this announcement, and will do just as we agree. Write to-day for a package at our risk and expense, giving your age and ailments, and mention the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, so we may know that you are entitled to this liberal offer.

ENTIRELY CURED OF RHEUMATISM AT THE AGE OF 78.

Rev. John Fuchs, the Well-Known Evangelical Minister, Tells of Wonderful Quick Results.

I was afflicted with Rheumatism for many years, the attacks being especially strong during last winter. I could not sleep nights on account of the pain, which centered in my back and left leg. My nervous system was also so affected that when I shaved myself I had to support the right hand with the left one. The doctors who treated me said they could not help me, as I was 78 years old and my system, according to them, was entirely worn out. I doctored with so many kinds of medicine that I had a small drug store at home, but nothing helped me. I had new hopes, as summer approached, that the warm weather would bring me relief, but this hope was not gratified, as I grew no better. Then I gave up all thought of a cure, thinking that the doctors were right and that nothing could help me.

One day I read the VITAE-ORE advertisement in our leading church paper, and sent for a package on trial as advertised. After five days I remitted the dollar for the treatment, as it had, in that short time, done me so much good that I was entirely willing to pay the money. After using two packages I was entirely cured of the Rheumatism, and my nervous system is now so wonderfully improved and strengthened that I can work with as much force and vigor as I could twenty or twenty-five years ago. VITAE-ORE has caused an entire change in my system, seeming to make a new man of me. I wanted to wait with my report until I was fully convinced that the benefit is entire and permanent, and I write at this time without the least inducement from the Theo. Noel Company, merely through appreciation toward God and the wonderful VITAE-ORE medicine, as well as the advertisement in our church paper. I hope that VITAE-ORE will continue to be a blessing to all ailing mankind.

desires better health or who suffers pain, ills and diseases which have defied the medical world and grown worse with age. We care not for your skepticism, but ask only your investigation, and at our expense, regardless of what ills you have, by sending to us for a package.

YOUR DOCTOR may tell you that your case is incurable, that medical science is unable to help you, that all you can expect is temporary or slight relief. Well, let him think so. He is certainly entitled to his opinion. You need not think so unless you wish to. Many people whose testimony appears in the books and pamphlets of Theo. Noel, were told that their cases were hopeless, helpless, impossible, incurable, past all recovery, yet read their testimony. Many were told that they had but a few short years—some but months—to live, yet read their testimony. There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in the doctor's philosophy, and Vitae-Ore is one of them.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumphs speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Gall sores and blisters cause the horse much pain. They come from heat and friction under the collar or saddle. The parts should be carefully cleansed with a pure soap that will not smart. Ivory Soap with warm water, is excellently adapted to this purpose. This soap is peculiarly efficient where it comes in contact with sores, as it is mild and pure. While cleansing thoroughly, it also soothes and heals.

The I. O. O. F. Lodge at Chicago Heights, Ill., has invited Harry E. Tucker to preach the memorial sermon June 19. The trustees of the First Presbyterian Church have very kindly offered the use of their church for the occasion, in the absence of their pastor, who sails for England June 13.

The C. W. B. M.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions will hold its 30th annual convention in St. Louis beginning Friday afternoon, Oct. 14, at 2 o'clock, and closing Saturday afternoon. The program will be announced soon. It will be one of their best. There will be some new speakers who have not been heard in National Conventions. Some of the old ones who delight us all will also be heard. Missionaries will present the work of their various fields. Mrs. McDaniel will represent Mexico on the program. Mrs. Alderman, either in convention or conference, will tell of her experience in Monterey. Mrs. Irwin of Porto Rico will have a message from that Island. The 8 o'clock conferences of Monday and Tuesday mornings will be unusually important. This has been a year of great prosperity and great opportunity. There will be many things to report in which we will all rejoice. We are wont to declare each convention better than the one that preceded it. We expect this one, because of the place and the occasion, to excel them all.

Current Events

Some of our Presbyterian brethren have just discovered that the Civil War is really a Dead Issue. Slavery is no longer a living issue. They are to be congratulated. Some others have not yet found it out. The United Presbyterian Assembly, in session at Greenville, Pa., voted by an overwhelming majority to accept the basis of union that had been submitted to it by the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church of the South. Perhaps it is scarcely yet to be expected that some of the larger bodies which perpetuate the schisms of half a century ago over the slavery question, will make the same interesting discovery of the defunctness of that issue. But they will find it out sooner or later. The spirit of union is in the air. They cannot but absorb it. Besides it will not be possible for great bodies of consecrated and intelligent men and women to keep their eyes glued to the ghost of an issue which was shot to pieces more than a generation ago, while they are earnestly trying, as they are, to march forward and serve the present time.

Decoration day is a festival which becomes increasingly sad year by year, because each year more of the heroes of our wars have joined the great procession that has passed over, and fewer are left to scatter flowers on the graves of their departed comrades. But it is also growing increasingly joyous, for the old bitterness and sectionalism are nearly gone and the memory of the brave men of both North and South is the heritage of the whole nation. So while, in its personal aspects, the day is marked by more of sadness and each year adds to the pathos of the dwindling remnant, in its larger meaning the day has more of joy because less of bitterness than ever before. On Monday of last week President Roosevelt delivered a Memorial day address on the field of Gettysburg, and he was never acting more truly as the president of the whole country than in that act. It was a strong address, full of the sentiments that make for peace and unity and of wise counsels for the meeting of present emergencies in our national life. That, after all, is the value of Memorial day. It is not only reminiscent and appreciative of the virtues which were displayed in a past crisis. It should be a day for the religious cultivation of the spirit of patriotism. If the Fourth of July is hopelessly given over to riotous merriment and ear-splitting demonstrations, let us make more of Decoration day as a time for learning and teaching the quieter lesson of real patriotism.

Journalism nowadays is not content to record events as they happen, but prides itself upon creating news. An Imported Excitement. Thus some of the great New York papers have, from time to time, undertaken expeditions, explorations, enterprises of various sorts, which had a real value in themselves as well as a news value. This is all right. But recently a newspaper device has come into vogue which bears the likeness of caricature to this journalism which does things. In Paris a year or more ago a considerable sum of money was hidden in a public place by an enterprising journal and daily hints were published to guide searchers for the hidden treasure. The hunt became a great theme of popular interest and a general topic of conversation, and naturally the circulation of the paper boomed. The scheme was tried also in London with equally sensational results. Now the idea has crossed the ocean and some American newspapers are working the same absurd and demoralizing device. In one case the money is furnished by the street car company which expects to get large returns from carrying the people to the tract where it is said to be hidden. And the people are carrying out their part of the program and are paying in carfare in the aggregate several times as much as the amount of the prize. But then, the American people always were the greatest "biters" in the world.

But that apart, does it not seem that there are enough reasonable and inevitable excitements, enough objects of intelligent interest for the papers to report, without going out of their way to create trivialities which shall pass, among the more foolish sort, for objects of real interest and diligent pursuit? It is a common criticism upon the daily press that it has no sense of proportion, that it magnifies the unimportant and minimizes things of real consequence. Such devices tend to support this criticism.

An explosion followed by a fire in one of the largest distilleries in Peoria, Ill., last Saturday resulted in the loss of thirty thousand barrels of whiskey, the death of ten men, and the cremation of nearly four thousand steers in the neighboring stock yards who were caught in the blazing spirit. The property loss was considerably over a million dollars. It was, to be sure, a lamentable accident—especially the death of the men and the destruction of the steers. But when has the consumption of thirty thousand barrels of whiskey ever been attended by so small a loss of human life?

Nearly every honest American who has seen something of the world will confess that few peoples are more fickle or more faddy in some respects than the great American public. Get any "craze" started, whether it be for roller-skating or a long-haired musician, and the American people are the ones who will pay their money for it. They will in one breath sneer at society spelled with a capital S and the next moment bow down before one of the "400" in a way that the Frenchman, the Englishman or the German would not. It is one of the strange things in the American's make-up. Independent as none else in most things, his striving for public notoriety and his eagerness to "get on" seem to warp, in vary many instances, some of the fine elements of his character. That the public press is responsible for much of the toadyism and snobbery of the day is undeniable. The visit of Miss Alice Roosevelt has raised the question.

That young lady has bemeaned herself as we would expect the daughter of such a sire to behave. She "did" the World's Fair in a healthful, democratic way. But because she was the daughter of the president some folks behaved in a very foolish way with regard to her. We may be sure that they did not win her good opinion of themselves and we imagine they must have lost their own.

There is a common belief that the Jew is the most thrifty of all peoples.

The Wealth and Poverty of the Hebrew.

It is an undoubted fact that when he has a measure of freedom from prosecution and is given the opportunity to rise he is seldom or never a beggar. And for the most part the Jew in London, or New York, who is seemingly poverty-stricken is such because he has not had time to overcome a situation that has been forced upon him. He is a vendor of shoe-laces or fried fish to-day; in a dozen years his condition will be much improved. This is the history of thousands of cases in Paris, London, New York and other large cities where Hebrews are now prominent in all financial circles. When one goes to the still freer west we find that much of the wealth of San Francisco is owned by Jews. They control the choicest residence districts of Los Angeles and the large ostrich feather industry, and the wine business is almost entirely in their hands. The principal meat-packing houses are under their control and they have a large interest in the oil business. The Jew is an important factor in the present and the future of America. In what direction will his religious instincts be turned? The way to the winning of the Hebrew might well be pondered by every Christian minister.

We deplore mob-rule, even when the mob may have right on its side.

The Fake Bull-Fight.

That will extenuate either the conduct of the mob or the effects of its conduct. A certain company started to give a bull-fight exhibition in St. Louis. The question of a Sunday bull-ring was not at issue. It happened that Sunday was the day chosen. Early in the week the meeting of Congregational ministers discussed the matter and appointed one of their number to protest to the authorities against permitting a bull-fight. The people who paid their dollars on Sunday had no reason in the world to complain, because Governor Dockery had given orders that the fight could not be held and this fact was widely advertised. They put their money on a speculation and when they lost they had no right to cry, and especially no right to fight back and destroy the property of the bull-fight company. Every man who can be proved to have had any part in the riot should be punished to the full extent of the law. As for the company advertising the bull-fight they are well punished already for their folly. Their whole procedure indicates intentional fraud. They advertised constantly a "real bull-fight," yet the license they had received strictly barred all cruelty to animals. Seeing it is impossible to hold a bull-fight under such conditions, the company was either attempting a "fake" or had in mind to defeat the law. In either case they deserved punishment. So far as they are concerned we will waste no sympathy over the fact that an angry mob set fire to their property and did several thousand dollars' worth of damage. We commend Gov. Dockery for his prompt action and the officers for enforcing his order to prevent the fight. But the Suburban Street Car Co. deserves censure for carrying on the front of their cars advertisements of the fight after the governor's order prohibiting it had been made public. The company is subject to the charge of obtaining money by false pretenses. St. Louis has to live down a very bad reputation. That people who wanted to see animals tortured should vent their spite because the blood was not spilled, will make a greater impression on the outside world than the fact that our governor did his duty. It becomes us to be very zealous in insisting on the observance of the law in every particular and in branding big corporations as well as individual offenders when they put the nickel higher than the law.

After perhaps the most remarkable struggle in the history of conventions the dead-

The Deadlock Broken.

lock in the Illinois republican convention was broken on the 79th ballot by the nomination of Charles S. Deneen as the republican candidate for governor. Mr. Lowden was within 121 votes of the nomination at one time. It was a very general opinion that when the Yates faction broke loose Lowden would go forward with a whirl. But contrary to the expectations of many Governor Yates not only held his followers, but swung them to the Deneen standard. This going over to his enemy, the choice of the Chicago "ring papers" who have steadily opposed the governor's renomination, is not so surprising to us as it appears to be to the politicians. For the governor was even more opposed to what is known as the "federal crowd," which Deneen had to contend with as well. The nomination of Mr. Deneen will probably lead to the strongest organization the party has ever had in the state. The new nominee is a man of high principle, undoubted ability and will make an ideal governor, judging by his past record. He stands for the people against boodle and graft and that ilk.

After the definite victory of the Japanese at Kinchow, than which no battle in modern history is more replete with courage, especially the capture of the Nansan heights, which the Japs carried after nine charges, there has come another period of rumor and uncertainty as to the results of the struggle. It is reported that the Japanese main army, reinforced, is marching down the east coast towards Port Arthur, and that a fight may now be in progress. If reports be true, Gen. Kuropatkin also has been reinforced.

President Roosevelt is a father and takes a great interest in the young folks. He has just been giving a "heart to heart" talk to the school in which two of his own sons are pupils. He urged his hearers not to become prigs, but study to be strong, decent and resourceful. The man who lacked these qualities, he said, was a poor sort of character, while those possessing them would never become snobs. It was only natural that the President, who believes in men showing their capacity before applying for office, should tell his youthful auditors that it is necessary for boys in school, and for men taking part in social affairs, to demonstrate that they have the power to accomplish things and do their part, for if they cannot do this they must yield place to those who can. A great many other people agree entirely with Mr. Roosevelt's admonitions. It is worth knowing that the training at Groton school is distinctly religious. This element enters into each day's routine, while on Sundays the boys go out in groups to half-a-dozen mission stations and conduct Sunday-schools.

What Christianity Needs.

It needs testing. It needs to be applied. It needs incarnation continuously in the lives of its professors. We have given too much time and thought and energy, relatively, to theorizing, speculating, and philosophizing about Christianity, and too little to the actual work which Christ has called us to do. Hence our doubts, our timid faith, our uncertainties. Do and you shall know, is the divine law. Certitude in the things of the Spirit comes from obedience to the leadings of the Spirit.

There are a hundred unsettled questions pertaining to the history and literature of the Bible, and to theology, and when these are settled, if they ever are, there will be as many more new ones. We can afford to leave many of these to the specialists in that line, who are very few in number, while the rest of us devote ourselves to the real work of God in bringing this earth under the reign of righteousness. On every hand there is work that needs to be done which only Christian people can do. If the Church of Jesus Christ should turn its attention for the next quarter of a century to doing the work that Christ wishes to be done in the world, what vast strides the kingdom of God would make! This would not hinder the scholars from carrying on their researches, nor the rest of us from keeping in touch with the results of their labors, and it would release a vast amount of time and talents to be employed in actual experiments in bettering the condition of the world by the application of the gospel to its manifold needs.

This plan would be a great boon to those who are troubled with doubts about some theological questions, the preaching of which disturbs the minds of their people without giving them any corresponding good. They believe in God, in the saving power of the gospel as a remedy for human ills. Let them turn aside from doubtful disputations, and show their faith in the fundamental verities of religion by actually doing and getting others to do the work which Christ expects his disciples to do. This would no doubt solve many of their doubts and lead to a larger and more vital faith. We often think of Christian work as a test of faith, but we are yet to learn that it is no less a promoter of faith.

We have an idea, which we have cherished for a long time, and which grows stronger with the passing years, that the church is to find its lost unity, not in discussing and agreeing upon theological problems, but in working together under the leadership of Christ, to rescue this world from the dominion of sin.

In a common work under a common Lord, we will find our common faith, in which we can "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Four centuries of Protestantism ought to have taught us by this time that division and strife, rather than unity and brotherly love, result from efforts to bring about uniformity in thought and methods of organization and worship by legislative enactments or by the eternal pressure of creedal authority. The whole history of Roman Catholicism shows that any uniformity purchased by the sacrifice of individual freedom is a dead formalism that is lacking in the essential elements of Christian unity.

What we propose, then, is that, leaving doubtful disputations, and turning over the critical problems to the few scholars, on each side, who are competent to deal with them, we address ourselves with a whole-hearted faith to the doing of those things that we all agree ought to be done—the preaching of the gospel, and living it, and then applying its principles to our social, industrial and political ills. This we believe would introduce a new era of Christianity, and would soon bring about what our Lord prayed for—the unity of His disciples.

Unreasonable Conservatism.

The action of the Protestant Episcopal diocesan convention of Missouri in refusing to substitute the Revised for the King James version of the Bible in its church services, strikes us as an instance of unreasonable conservatism. It is the more to be regretted because there is an element in all religious bodies that would sacrifice accuracy and truth on the altar of custom and ancient usage, and this element will be confirmed in its rejection of the new and better version by this action of our Episcopal friends.

It is not denied by any competent scholar, so far as we know, that we have a more accurate translation of the original Hebrew and Greek in the Revised Version than in that of King James, but it is claimed that these modern revisers have sacrificed euphony and beauty of literary form for accuracy and clearness. One of the defenders of the action of the Episcopal convention cites as an illustration of the error of the revisers the substitution of "love" for "charity" in Paul's celebrated chapter—the thirteenth of First Corinthians, "thereby sacrificing its matchless music" just to get into English what Paul meant! Most people, we imagine, can hear more "music" in "love" than in "charity" with its modern meaning and associations. But the question of "music" is subordinate to the question of what is the thought of the inspired writers. These "holy men of old" who "spoke as the Holy Spirit gave them utterance," did not seek for the "excellency of speech" on which Greek rhetoricians prided themselves, but were concerned rather with the truths they were seeking to convey. This, we take it, should be the chief concern of those who translate their writings into another language.

It is not claimed by any one that the Revised Bible is a perfect translation of the scriptures. It may be admitted that now and then the revisers have obscured rather than made more intelligible some passage. But these are rare exceptions, and on the whole the verdict of the world's best scholarship is that the Revised Bible, and especially the American Revised Bible, is the best version of the scriptures in the English tongue, and is a vast improvement over the King James version. It would be easy to point out numerous passages in both the Old and New Testaments, in which the sense was entirely obscured or perverted in the old version, but is clearly brought out in the revision. So numerous and important are these passages, not to mention a much larger number of others in which the sense of the original is more clearly brought out, that it is amazing that any religious body, professing to believe in the inspiration and supreme authority of the scriptures, would reject the newer for the older version.

It is unnecessary to point out the fact that the Christian scholars of to-day are much better equipped for the task of translating the scriptures than were those of King James' day, for this fact is generally recognized and would not be denied by our Episcopal brethren. But what avails this superior scholarship if the results of its mature thought and diligent labors through many years are to be set aside by prejudice, by the fear of disturbing ancient forms, and on the plea that the older and less correct version is in better literary form? This is to set the form above the substance—a peril to which this church is specially exposed. We do not under-estimate the value of literary form, but to exalt it above clearness and accuracy in a translation of inspired thought is to value the casket above the jewels it contains.

We desire to make this action of the Episcopal convention the occasion of once more urging upon our readers, and our churches, the use of the American Revised Bible. A people who love religious truth, who exalt the authority of the holy scriptures, can not afford to be satisfied with less than the best translation of the sacred oracles.

Editor's Easy Chair.

In its wandering to and fro up and down the earth last week, the Easy Chair lighted upon a certain place which had a familiar air. It is night, but the west is yet crimson with the reflected rays of the sun that has long since sunk to rest. A chill is on the air, as if it had blown from snow drifts on far-off mountain peaks. A bright fire gleams on the hearth, and without there is a familiar lullaby of wavelets on the beach. Aside from this "music on the lonely shore" stillness reigns supreme. There is something in these associations—these sights and sounds, these familiar walls with their familiar pictures—that calls up a whole troop of memories running back through more than a dozen years. Faces and forms of little children, and of children older grown, and of friends many and dear, pass in review, with many a well-remembered saying and incident connected with loved ones who are not here to-night. A little red wagon calls up a sunny-haired boy whose merry chatter once echoed in these rooms. A tiny bureau with its mirror and drawers causes us to hear again the cheery voice of a little girl with golden hair, whose feet were wont to patter up and down these stairs and whose presence has brightened several summers in this cottage. For this is none other than Edgewood-on-the-Lake, and these resounding waves, sending up their age-long anthem, are breaking on the beach at Macatawa Park.

Yes, it is early to be at the lakeside, but alas, it is "just for to-night"! To-morrow we go hence and give place to others who we trust may enjoy these surroundings as much as we have in the past. We have never seen the Park in its earliest and youngest spring dress before. The leaves are little more than half grown; the earliest flowers are yet blooming upon the hillsides. The very air is laden with the sweet odors of the woods and the flowers. It is a delight to walk through these now quiet and unfrequented paths, to breathe the fresh odor of the woods and listen to the very stillness and peace which abound. Soon these winding paths and roadways will be trodden by the feet of summer tourists, and these quiet woods will echo with the laughter and songs of the young and gay, and listen, perhaps, as they have often listened in the past, to the oft-told story that never grows old, of love's young dreams and hopes and aspirations. What fitter place or time than these serpentine paths that wind in and out through the great trees and around sheltered nooks, in the cool summer evening, for heart to commune with heart on the deepest and most sacred things of life? It would be interesting to know how many solemn vows of everlasting affection have been exchanged in these romantic surroundings, and how long they have lasted!

We wish we could speak as approvingly of what man is doing to beautify this fair spot, as we have of the part which nature has performed and is performing in the miracles of the early summer. But alas, the trail of the serpent is found in every earthly paradise. That its presence in this Park grows more manifest each year is a matter of sincere regret to those who have loved it most, and who have done most to commend it to others as a place where one may find rest for body, mind and heart. Macatawa Park is now at the parting of the ways; its future character will soon be determined. If the present plans are suffered to mature unmolested, the people who have loved it for its quietness, its morality, its religious character, will have to look elsewhere for their ideal resort. The cottagers may prevent this by timely and vigorous action if they will. If they submit now they are henceforth at the mercy of any scheme which greed or avarice may prompt. Satan loves a beautiful site for his synagogue, as well as do the saints, and eternal vigilance is the price of decency and morality. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

One of the days during our brief trip to the north was Decoration day. The trains were crowded with excursionists, mostly young people, who have come on the stage of action since the great drama of our civil war. To many of these it is simply a holiday—only that and nothing more. Little do they know of the bitter sacrifices and the noble heroisms of those days that tried men's souls. But the old, scarred veterans here and there were falling into ranks once more to march with halting steps to the cemetery, to scatter flowers on the graves of their fallen comrades. These men feel the thrill of old time scenes and struggles as memory recalls them to view. Their thin ranks and halting gait are in pathetic contrast with the invincible hosts that marched, with the measured tread of veterans, to the battlefields of the south in the dark days between '61 and '65. Aye, scatter flowers upon the graves of these fallen heroes, both of those who wore the blue and of those who wore the gray. Their blood cemented the nation's bond of unity, and gave their country a new birth of freedom and of glory. In the hour of peril they laid down their lives on the altar of patriotism and deserve to live in the affectionate remembrance of those who enjoy the blessings, for the perpetuation of which these heroes offered up their lives. Soon, very soon, their comrades who survive them will also pitch their tents beyond the river, on "fame's eternal camping ground."

Questions and Answers.

If a member of another church should request you to baptize him stating that he would remain with his denomination, would you do so? If so, why? If not, why?—John L. Lewis, Warren, Ind.

If convinced that the person making the request was a penitent believer and was actuated by a sincere desire to obey his Lord in baptism, we should baptize him, leaving the matter of his relationship with any given church to his own conscience and sense of duty. Our reason for doing so would be that as a penitent believer he is entitled to baptism, and his desire to remain in affiliation with his denomination does not nullify his faith or his penitence. That is a matter of information. He is probably acting in harmony with his best judgment, and while we would try to point out to him "a more excellent way," namely, to discard denominational name or creed, we should leave it entirely to his judgment, under guidance of New Testament teaching, to work out that problem for himself.

Our congregation is about to invest in a supply (several hundred copies) of new hymnals. It is suggested that we go outside our own books and make selection of a certain hymnal that has been before the public for some years; is intended to be undenominational and does not bear the imprint of a sectarian publisher. This book is larger and is more pretentious in appearance (and consequently more expensive) than any published by our people. It is urged that this book should be chosen because it comprises one of the most extensive and choicest collections of strictly evangelical, standard hymns; also, because of the fact that there is no essential difference in the character of the hymns found in all of the orthodox hymnals of the better class. Will you indicate, for the benefit of our churches in general, what, under all the circumstances, is the wisest course—and why—as between the adoption of one of our hymnals or one like the above mentioned.

HYMNOLOGY.

June 2, 1904.

It is true that denominationalism figures less in the hymnology of the churches than anywhere else. It is necessarily so because the only hymns that have power to live from generation to generation are those which breathe the spirit of devotion and which express sentiments that lie at the very heart of the gospel. There is no hymn book used by any of the churches but that contains a large amount of music which any other church can use with equal acceptance. "Indeed there is a large number of the old standard hymns and tunes which are to be found in every first-class hymnal. New hymns come and go but these go on forever.

But while this is true, there are perhaps a few songs in every denominational book which another religious body would not care to use. There is something in the form of worship in each religious body that necessarily affects its hymnology. In our own churches, for instance, there is a demand for hymns appropriate to the Lord's day, to the Lord's Supper and to Christian baptism which it would be difficult to find in any hymnal not specially compiled for use in our churches. In addition to the hymns, however, it is customary now, in the best hymnals, to publish responsive readings from the Scriptures, and here again there is necessarily adaptation in such selections to the various occasions and needs of each religious body. In addition to these reasons why it seems desirable that our churches should use their own hymnals, other things being equal, it is to be said that we can in no other way better promote unity among ourselves than by singing the same hymns. Unity in hymnology has always been regarded as one of the best means of promoting unity in faith and in worship.

We notice our querist states that the book referred to is "larger and more pretentious in appearance than any published by our people." This is because we have not maintained the unity among ourselves which we should have done in the matter of a church hymnal. Notwithstanding, we have a number of hymnals, very respectable in size, in mechanical execution and in the quality of their music, any one of which, we should say, would be better adapted to the average church among us than the excellent book referred to above. For, after all, we cannot omit the consideration of adaptation to the needs of the churches which are to use the hymnals. There is a grade of music of a high order against which nothing can be said, except that it is out of the reach of the membership of the average church. There must be the combination, with this class of music, of a simpler kind that will appeal to a larger number of singers. The Christian Publishing Co., in connection with the Hackleman Music Co., of Indianapolis, has in an advanced state of preparation a hymnal which will be equal to the best published in this country, and which will contain the additional advantage of being adapted to the needs of our own churches. A large number of leading brethren are co-operating with these companies in the preparation and oversight of this work, which we hope to put upon the market in a few months. There is a growing demand on the part of our best churches for such a hymnal, and the publishers have decided to assume the financial risk of getting out such a work at no little cost and pains, to meet this demand. Meantime, we think the churches would do well to use one of the very good hymnals already published by our different publishing houses.

Notes and Comments.

A gentleman and his wife, strolling leisurely along in front of our World's Fair pavilion, on the Fair Grounds, the other day, paused to read the name above the door and the scriptural mottoes on the panels on either side of the door. The man was heard to comment as follows: "That is all very well if they will only live up to it!" A very pertinent comment. Aye, "living up to it" is the rub. It is easy enough to adopt an unsectarian name and creed, if only they did not impose the obligation of living up to them, at least to some worthy degree. The world has a right to expect that those who claim to occupy such high, unsectarian ground shall be unsectarian in spirit, in doctrine and in conduct. Right thinking minds everywhere endorse a broad, unsectarian platform that is true both to the gospel and to the principle of Christian liberty, but many are waiting for a demonstration of the practicability of such a platform. They are asking the question, "Can it be lived up to?"

Jesus recognized this principle of making one's life correspond to his creed when He said to His disciples: "For if ye love them that love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? Do not even the Gentiles the same?" If He were addressing a company of His disciples to-day who had set out to promote the unity of His followers on the basis of faith in and personal allegiance to Himself, we can easily imagine him as saying: "If you love those only who agree with you in opinion, what reward have you? If you can co-operate in Christian work and worship only with those whose theological opinions you endorse, what do ye more than others? If your broader creed has not given you a broader charity, greater tolerance for differences of opinion, and a greater love for your brethren who do not agree with you in all things, what profit is there in it?" Yes, we may be assured that not only the world but Christ Himself expects us to live up to" what we profess to believe, and to put in practice what we teach.

Referring to our editorial note in a recent number of the Christian-Evangelist in reference to a religious press parliament, Rev. James E. Clarke, editor of the Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., writes: "I shall be glad to second your motion, and congratulate you upon having taken the initiative. In my opinion such a meeting if arranged for should be held in the early part of October." Now that the motion has been made and seconded, remarks are in order. What do the brethren of the press say on the subject of having a Religious Press Congress or Parliament in the early part of October, in connection with the World's Fair, to discuss such topics as we suggested in our former editorial and others that may be agreed upon? It occurs to us that the religious press has been somewhat ignored in the recent World's Press Parliament and that it would be nothing more than a dignified assertion of the value of our calling, to plan for and hold such a congress as has been suggested.

Speaking of the power of Christian work to promote Christian union, a recent writer says:

"The principle has striking illustration in the history of the Disciples. They set out to unite Christians in order to evangelize the world. As a historical fact the only efficient union they have attained, even among themselves, has been during the period of their organized missionary work and among the churches participating in that work. They might then reverse their motto to read: The evangelization of the world in order to unite the church."

There is no denying the fact that the enlistment of our forces in missionary work has been a powerful unifying agency. It would be difficult, too, for us to show to the world that we have any practical Christian unity outside of the churches co-operating in some way and to some extent in our missionary work. There is food for reflection in this remark on the part of churches and brethren standing aloof from our co-operative work. We need a union that can be seen—a visible, tangible, practical union.

Wanted—More Rest By J. H. Jowett

"I will give you rest." Give! This kind of rest is always a gift; it is never earned. It is not the emolument of toil; it is the dowry of grace. It is not the prize of endeavor, its birth precedes endeavor, and is indeed the spring and secret of it. It is not the perquisite of culture, for between it and culture there is no necessary and inevitable communion. It broods in strange and illiterate places, untouched by scholastic and academic refinement, but it abides also in cultured souls which have been chastened by the manifold ministry of the schools. It is not a work, but a fruit, not the product of organization, but the sure and silent issue of a relationship. "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."

But even the gift of rest does not disclose its unutterable contents in a day. It is an immediate gift, but it is also a continuous discovery. "Learn of me . . . and ye shall find rest." Part of "the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" lie in this wealthy gift of rest, and it is one of the frequent and delightful surprises of grace that we should repeatedly come upon new and unexpected veins of ore in this deep mine of "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." I say that the rest of the Lord is an immediate gift and a perpetual discovery. "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest." "Learn of me . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

And so I am to speak to you of the riches of the Christian rest. Do you feel it to be an irrelevant note, an inappropriate theme, in the march and warfare of our times? Surely we need to speak of battle-fields rather than of green pastures, and to hear the nerving call to struggle and duty rather than the soft and gentle wooings that call to rest! Our times demand the warrior's bugle-peal, and not the shepherd's pipe of peace! Ah, but, brethren, in this warfare the trumpeter himself is shorn of inspiration unless he have the gift of rest, and the warrior himself is rendered impotent unless he be possessed by the secret of the heavenly peace. The restless trumpeter ministers no thrill, and the perturbed warrior lacks the very genius of conquest. I know the feverish motions of our time, the restlessness of fruitless desire, the disturbing forebodings of anxiety, the busy-ness of the devil, the sleepless and perspiring activity of Mammon, the rush to be rich, the race to be happy, the craving for sensation, the immense impetus and speed characterising every interest in our varied life, and added to all, the precipitate shedding of hoary forms and vestures, and the reclothing of the thoughts of men in modern and more congenial attire. I know the general restlessness, the heated and consuming haste, and knowing them I proclaim that the secret of a successful antagonism must be sought in the profound restfulness of the church. I do not wonder at the restlessness of the world, but I stand amazed at the restlessness of the Savior's Church! We are encountering restlessness by restlessness, and on many sides we are suffering defeat. The antagonists ought to be of quite another order. The contendants must be restfulness versus rest, and the odds will be overwhelmingly on our side. Let me pause to make a few distinctions in order that my argument may not be misunderstood. We must distinguish between indolent passivity and active restfulness. I am not pleading for enervating ease, but for enabling and inspiring rest. Ease is an opiate; rest is a stimulant, say rather a nutriment. Ease is the enemy of strength; rest is the hidden resource. I am not the advocate of the couch, but the advocate of restful and therefore invincible movement. Our scientists distinguish between motion and energy, and I could wish that some similar distinction might be transferred to the sphere of the Church. All activity is not influential. All speech is not persuasive. All supplication is not effective. The secret of effective supplication is a quiet faith. The secret of effective speech is a hidden assurance. The secret of triumphant warfare is a permanent peace. The essential and operative element in all fruitful activity is a deep and abiding rest. We must fight the prevalent restlessness by a sovereign peace. "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."

Now, my brethren, I confess I miss this essential in the modern Church. How think you? Is the Church of our day characterized by that wealthy peace and rest which ought to be the portion of all saved, forgiven and sanctified men and women? I confess that peace and rest are about the last grace I think about when I gaze upon the modern Church! The care lines, and the wrinkles of worry and anxiety and uncertainty, and a general air of restlessness, seem to me almost as prevalent upon the countenance of the Church as upon the face of the world. The Church is not conspicuous by the smoothness of its brow! Everywhere I detect a certain strain, a certain fussy precipitancy, a certain trembling activity, a certain emulating care. We look like men and women who are carrying more than we can bear, and who are attempting tasks that are quite beyond our strength. If I listen to our prevailing vocabulary, and note the words that are most in evidence, my impression of the general restlessness is only confirmed. The vocabulary is scriptural enough so far as it goes, but the real fertilizing terms are too much obscured or ignored. The great, hot, dry words in the terminology are manifest enough: strive, fight, wrestle, oppose, work, war, do, endeavor; but those gracious, energizing words, lying there with the soft dews upon them: grace, rest, joy, quietness, assurance—these deep, generic words are not sufficiently honored in our modern speech. I am calling for the resurrection of these domestic terms in order that the military terms may be revived. I am calling to peace for the sake of warfare. I am calling to rest for the sake of labor. I plead for a little more mysticism for the sake of our enthusiasms. I proclaim the sacredness and necessity of the cloister in the soul, the necessity of a chamber of peace, a centre of calmness, a "heart at rest, when all without tumultuous seems." Rest is the secret of conquest, and it is to the Church, therefore, and not to the world, that I primarily offer this evangel to-day:—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavily laden, and I will give you rest."

Now, when I look around upon the strained and wrinkled Church, moving often in the pallor of fear and uncertainty when she ought to exult in the pink of strength and assurance, I am impressed with certain primary lacks in her equipment. The strain frequently comes at the hill; not always so; perhaps not even commonly so; for perhaps it is true both of men and of Churches that the strain is not so much felt in the sharp and passing crisis as in the dull and jogging commonplace. Perhaps there is more strain in the prolonged drudgery than in the sudden calamity. The dead level may try us more than the hill! "Because they have no changes they fear not God." But come the strain how it may, all strain is suggestive of inadequate resources; and the wrinkled, restless, careworn face of the Church makes it abundantly evident that the Church is not entering into the fullness of "the inheritance of the saints in light." What does the Church require if her strain and her paralyzing restlessness are to be removed?

She needs a more restful realization of her Lord's presence. My brethren, we fight too much as soldiers whose leader is out of the field. We work too much as though our Exemplar were a dead Nazarene instead of a living and immediate friend. We tear about with the aimless, pathetic wanderings of little chicks when the mother bird is away. And so our life is strained and restless and uninspired when it might be filled with a big and bracing contentment. We need the stimulating consciousness of a great and ever-present companionship. We know the stimulus of lofty companionship in other spheres and in smaller communions. We know the influence of Stevenson's companionship upon Mr. Barrie and Mr. Crockett. That companionship acted like a second literary conscience, restraining all careless and hasty work, but it also acted as an unfailing inspiration, quickening the very tissues of their minds and souls. It was a companionship that was not only like a great white throne of literary judgment, but a throne out of which flowed, as there does out of every engaging personality, a river of water of life, vitalizing all who hold communion with it. But when we lift up the relationship, and contemplate the great communion which we are all privileged to share in the companionship of the Lord, all similes tire and fall limp and ineffective, and leave the glory unexpressed! A restful realization of the Lord's companionship! That has been the characteristic of all men whose religious activity has been forceful, influential and fertile in the purposes of the Kingdom. At the very heart of all their labors, in the very centre of their stormiest days, there is a sphere of sure and restful intimacy with the Lord. You know how close and intimate and calm such intimacy can be. I think of Samuel Rutherford. I think of the love-language which he uses in his communion with the Lord. Only the Song of Solomon can supply him with the suitable expressions of holy passion where-with to tell the story of his soul's devotion. When I read some of his words I almost feel as though I were eavesdropping, and had overheard two lovers in their gentle and wooing speech. It is a fashion of language not congenial to our time, but that, my brethren, is only because in our day we have almost ceased to cultivate the affections, and confine our education to the culture of the intellect and the conscience. "We now make critics, not lovers," and the love-impassioned speech of Samuel Rutherford sounds to us like an alien tongue. Samuel Rutherford had a sweet and restful intimacy with his Lord, and therefore he was never idle, and never feared the coming day. I think of Jonathan Edwards, a man of greatly differing type from Samuel Rutherford, but also a man of multitudinous labors and of fearless persistence, and whose activities rested upon a sublime repose in the abiding sense of the reality and presence of his Lord. His latest biographer declares that he had "an immediate vision of the spiritual universe as the reality of realities," that "in exploring its recesses and in pondering its relations he did so as native and to the manner born," that perhaps next to the apostle John he exercised the surest and most intimate familiarity with things unseen. I think of David Hill, and I am conscious of the sweet and gracious perfume which was ever rising from his full and ever-moving life. At the heart of this busy worker was the restful lover; he moved about in assured and certain warfare because his soul was ever feasting in love-companionship with his Lord. I like this sentence of his: "What a thrill it gives me to meet with one who has fallen in love with Jesus!" Ah, but that is the speech of a lover, who is himself in love with the Lord. It is the thrill of systematic vibrations; it is the thrill of one who is already in love with the Lover, and who delights to see the Lover come to His own. David Hill's sort of warfare finds its explanation in the lover's thrill, and the lover's thrill has its secret in the lover's rest. But why should I keep up on these high planes of renowned and prominent personalities. Get a man who is restfully intimate with his Lord, and you have a man whose force is tremendous! Such men move in apparent ease, but it is the ease that is linked with the infinite, it is the very rest of God. They may be engaged in apparent trifles, but even in the doing of the trifles there emerge the health-giving currents of the Kingdom of God. Listen to James Smeatham: "I was at the leader's meeting last night. There was the superintendent. There was a gardener, a baker, a cheesemonger, a postman and myself. We sat till near ten p. m. Now what were the topics? When is the juvenile missionary meeting to be? When the society tea-meeting? How best to distribute the poor money, etc." Here were these unknown and unlettered men, engaged in apparently trivial business, but resting in the Lord, and pouring forth from their rest-possessed souls spiritual energy which to James Smeatham is like "healthy air," and "send me home," he says, "as last night, cured to the core, so fresh, so calm, so delivered from all my fears and troubles." Gentlemen, the man who is sure and restful in the conscious companionship of his Lord has about him the strainlessness and inevitableness of the ocean tide, and gives off bracing influence like God's fresh and wondrous sea. "Then had thy peace been like a river, and thy righteousness like the waves of the sea." Let us become restfully sure of God, and we shall meet the battalions of the evil one unstrained and undismayed. "Hold the fort, for I am coming!" The doctrine is pernicious, and fills the life with strain and fear and uncertainty! "For I am coming?" "The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge." Let the Church rest in her Lord and she will become terrible as an army with banners. "Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."

The Business Man and the Church

BY CHARLES B. SALA.

Many churches fail to do the good they might because they seem to trust their finances to inspiration. Their local business affairs are often so carelessly and loosely administered that not only is the individual church brought into discredit with the practical business man but he is led to unjustly judge the great and splendidly managed general missionary enterprises of the church.

Is it any wonder that one so often hears otherwise unprejudiced men, when solicited for money for missionary work, say, "Yes, I should like to give liberally to the work, but if the missionary affairs are as poorly managed as the local church finances, it won't do much good"? Of course ignorance is no excuse, but the church financiers who do not study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not reproof, are permitting their congregations to lose much prestige and power in attracting a class of men who will prove not only valuable additions to the membership but who will generally consecrate much money and talent to the Master's cause.

It is a rare exception when a business man attends our great National Missionary Conventions that he does not become enthused and deeply interested in the work of the societies. And why? Not because of the big speeches or flights of oratory but because he sees and knows for the first time perhaps that the general missionary societies are organized and managed on sound business principles that are sure to administer well the funds he places in their care. He sees they stand the closest inspection and are far better managed in a financial way than many really successful business institutions. He sees and is convinced that God really does help those who earnestly, studiously and carefully prepare and execute his work. Thus his confidence is built up in, and his purse unstrung for, the work of the church both general and local.

It is one of the purposes of this column to try to interest the Christian business men in the churches of Christ all over the country to attend the National Convention to be held at St. Louis October 13 to 20, 1904, and to come in contact with the home and the foreign work and workers and with His servants who manage the affairs pertaining thereto. The business men's meetings at the Cincinnati and Detroit conventions had this for their keynote. It ought to be done. It must be done.

The church needs consecrated tact and business sagacity as well as consecrated prayers and speeches. The Lord's business is not listed in Dunn's or Bradstreet's or it might have a pretty poor rating in some places.

Mr. Arbuthnot, the founder and for long years the proprietor of a great wholesale house in Pittsburg bearing his name, shortly before his death said in the presence of the writer, "Every legitimate business institution in a civilized land should pay liberal tribute to Jesus Christ, for his Gospel is not only the creator of the conditions that make such businesses possible and profitable but is the conservator of them as well."

At a recent church convention in Ohio the presentation to a good cause of a goodly sum of money by a brother without a word of eulogy or ovation was greeted with applause equal to that bestowed upon the most entertaining speaker. Verily, consecrated "money talks."

It is not too soon to begin to arrange your affairs to attend the St. Louis Convention. Your World's Fair visit will be the more profitable if you set apart at least two or three days for attendance at the sessions of the convention.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

The great question of church union is in the air. Here at the capital a significant meeting has just closed, the purpose of which was the amalgamation of three of America's religious bodies. From the opening of the quadrennial conference of the Methodist Protestant Church here to its close this was the topic overshadowing all others: "How shall the Congregationists, the United Brethren, and the M. P.'s get together?" There has been no division of opinion as to the wisdom of the consolidation, but some confusion as to the manner of accomplishing it. The forms of government differ. The United Brethren have an Episcopal form with bishops, the Congregationists have no central government, head or bishop, the Methodist Protestants are ruled by a general conference composed of an equal representation of clergy and laymen whose head is termed a president. The plan now is to bring about co-operation with the view of ultimate organic union, and is presented in a syllabus compiled by their committees in April as follows:

"1. We are agreed that the formulated statements of doctrine as held by each of these bodies at present are essentially the same; and we affirm them all as expressing 'the truth as it is in Jesus.'"

"2. We are agreed that these bodies shall retain their present name and their autonomy in respect to all local affairs, but that they add to their official title the words 'in affiliation with the general council of the united churches.'"

"3. We recommend that these bodies authorize the creation of a general council, composed of representatives elected from their respective bodies, on the basis of one representative for every 5,000 members."

"4. The powers of the general council shall be advisory, and any recommendation it may make shall be referred to the constituent bodies for approval."

"5. A committee of three from each of the general bodies represented shall be appointed to arrange for the time and place of the first meeting of the general council."

"6. At the first session of the general council a temporary organization shall be effected by the election of a chairman and secretary, and the council itself shall determine the officers it may need and the manner of permanent organization it may prefer."

"7. The purposes of the general council shall be: (1) To present, so far as we possibly can, a realization of that unity which seems so greatly desired by Christian churches. (2) To promote a better knowledge and a closer fellowship among the Christian bodies thus uniting. (3) To secure the co-ordination and unification of the three bodies in evangelistic, educational, and missionary work. (4) To adopt a plan by which the three bodies may be brought into co-ordinate activity and organic unity, a unity representing some form of connectionalism. (5) To prevent the unnecessary multiplication of churches; to unite weak churches of the same neighborhood wherever it is practicable, and to invite and encourage the affiliation with this council of other Christian bodies cherishing a kindred faith and purpose."

By a unanimous vote and amid great enthusiasm the conference endorsed the proposition to begin negotiations on this basis. Dr. Washington Gladden addressed the conference as the representative of the Congregationists. He thought there were no impossible barriers to the proposed union. This unity would signify something more than federation, for federation contemplates the maintenance intact of all the parts and organs of each of the denominations taking part in it. But this general council proposes to find ways in which the three denominations shall immediately become one in certain important parts of the work, which they are now carrying forward. Gradually through this co-operation ways ought to be found, he thought, of bringing the three bodies under one organization.

Dr. Weekley represented the United Brethren. He denied that some sects exist by the will of God, that they are the children of providence and should be left to work out each its mission in its own way. They stand for nothing vital. Their distinctiveness does not represent a single great principle. There is no apology for their presence among the great moral and religious forces of the age. Granting that many of them had a providential origin, is there not as much providence in the mighty currents of to-day which tend toward the merging of these institutions as there was in their origin? How humiliating the thought that much of the money raised in this country ostensibly to save the heathen is spent in keeping up ecclesiastical distinctions and consequently the most shameful rivalries! Why should a town of only a few hundred people be burdened with a half dozen churches when two at most would answer every purpose? Mere federation will not accomplish what we want. We must go farther. The call of God at this hour to husband our resources and to unify our forces to the end that we may conquer and win, is loud and clear.

It was an interesting discussion with a loud, clear note which I have heard before. It sounds far above the shrieks along the Yalu and on Nanshan Hill. It is not so significant because of the three bodies which it may bring into closer fellowship as it is suggestive of larger things—the beginning of a general movement that shall involve others and even move powerful religious organizations. It shows how the world is moving. Even while these three denominations were deliberating, propositions were considered by the conference looking to union with the Primitive Methodists and the Methodist Episcopal church, and the consolidation of the six Methodist churches in Japan.

Meantime the good work goes on in Buffalo, N. Y., the 116th General Assembly of "The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. of America," proposing union with the Southern branch known as "the Presbyterian Church in the United States," and the Cumberland Presbyterians. There was a warm time over the matter in the General Assembly of the last named brotherhood at Dallas, Tex., and in that of the southern church at Mobile the staid old-time decorum of that dignified body went all to pieces on the receipt of a telegram from their brethren in Buffalo. There ought surely to be no difficulty in effecting a union between the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. of America and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. The shortening of the name of the first by dropping the last two words seems to accomplish it at once. More than anything else slavery divided these bodies, and now that North and South have shaken hands across the bloody chasm, and men must look back forty years to recall the struggle, it seems high time for men and women who profess to love the Lord to forget their differences; yet not until this Buffalo Assembly has such action as that suggested by Dr. T. S. Hamlin of this city been taken, "removing all aspersions and charges of any and every kind made by previous assemblies reflecting on the Christian character" of the Southern church. The following resolutions still stand on the statute books of "the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. of America":

"The General Assembly exhorts its presbyteries, in the event that any of the ministers of the rebel states, sharing in the guilt of treason, shall apply for admission into these presbyteries, not to admit them, or in any way to recognize them as ambassadors of the Cross of Christ, until they give satisfactory evidence of their repentance of this sin."

"Private members of the church in the southern states applying for membership shall not be admitted to the communion of the church until they give evidence of repentance for their sin and renounce their error."

Two other Presbyterian bodies in session the past week have been busy also in this work of ecclesiastical courtship—the United Presbyterian Assembly and the Associated Reformed Presbyterian Church of the South. For twenty-nine years the courting has gone on and it is time for the nuptial ceremony. Amid great applause the already United brethren, in session at Greenville, Pa., received the proposal from their Southern ad-

The Atonement—II. By D. R. Dungan

Before coming to the New Testament, it will be in order to note some prophetic utterances. The fifty-third chapter of Isaiah contains several statements which show the Spirit's communication to him on the subject of what some of our critics call "substitutionary atonement." Verses 3, 4: "He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and as one from whom men hide their face he was despised, and we esteemed him not." It will be noticed that I take it for granted that the prophet is referring to the then coming Messiah. The quibble of Jewish rabbis is not worth the time necessary to mention. That Isaiah referred to the Jewish nation as a man answering to the things here said of the Savior breaks down at every point. I am astonished that even destructive critics have so little regard for themselves as to give us an occasional recital of rabbinical weakness.

Verses 5, 6: "But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and Jehovah hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." This is substitutionary; it is the Christ bearing the iniquity of men.

Verse 8: "For the transgression of my people to whom the stroke was due." The revision leaves no escape. Verse 11: "By the knowledge of himself shall my righteous servant justify many: and he shall bear their iniquities." Verse 12: "Yet he bars the sin of, and made intercession for the transgressors."

Some who have read the prophecies just a little object to many of the statements referring to the Christ because they are in the past tense. But the prophets reveal to us the things they saw in vision, at least, that is the case many times, and then of course they use the past tense as it was in the past when these things had been seen by them. The teaching of this chapter can not be missed. Christ took our place and suffered in our stead, and by or through that suffering, in which he poured out his soul unto death, he made it possible for men to be saved through their acceptance of the payment made for them.

Hos. 13:14: "I will ransom them from the power of sheol; I will redeem them from death: O death, where are thy plagues? O sheol, where is thy destruction? repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

What is it to ransom? Webster says, "to redeem from captivity, servitude, punishment, or forfeit, by paying a price; to buy out of servitude or penalty; to rescue; to deliver; as to ransom prisoners from an enemy." This then is what God does in Christ for men. Men are sold under bondage and have nothing with which to pay, and Christ becomes the ransom for them, that is, the price by which they can have their liberty.

This is the thought of Mark 10:45: "For the Son of man also came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Like this is the statement of Paul, 1 Tim. 2:6: "Who gave himself a ransom for all." That is, he paid the price of redemption for all that justice might be satisfied.

Akin to this is the word redemption. This will be so frequently used that it seems best to refer again to Webster. He says of this word: "The act of redeeming, or the state of being redeemed; purchase; ransom; release; rescue; deliverance; as the redemption of prisoners taken in war; the redemption of a ship and cargo. Specially: (a) (law) The liberation of an estate from a mortgage, or the taking back of property mortgaged upon the performance of the terms or conditions on which it was conveyed; also, the right of redeeming, and re-entering upon an estate mortgaged. See equity of redemption, under Equity, (b) (com) Performance of the obligation stated in a note, bill, bond, or other evidence of debt, by making payment to the holder. (c) (Theol) The procuring of God's favor, by the suffering and death of Christ; the ransom of deliverance of sinners from the bondage of sin and the penalties of God's violated law."

It seems well to have the words of English defined for two reasons, first, the revision has done as well or better than we would be able to do, and second, critics do not always seem very careful to employ our words in their legitimate import. This was clearly seen in our former paper, in the use of the word atonement. In Luke 2:38, we have an account of Hannah speaking to all them that looked for the redemption of Jerusalem, that is, its recovery from the hand of the enemy. In Heb. 9:12, however, it is the human race that is redeemed, or bought back: "Nor yet through the blood of goats and calves, but through his own blood, entered in once for all into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption". Again in verse fifteen of the same chapter: "And for this cause he is the Mediator of a new covenant, that a death having taken place for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, they that have been called, may receive the promise of the eternal inheritance." The atonement of Jesus is thus made clear by the offering of the high priest under the law in atoning for the sins of the people. While it was impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to take away sin, human transgression could be covered for a year at a time and thus carried forward to be blotted out by the offering of the blood of the Christ when, in the end of the ages, he became both the priest and the sacrifice in making expiation for the sins of the whole world.

Rom. 3:23-26: "For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus: whom God set forth to be a propitiation, through faith, in his blood, to show his righteousness, because of the passing over of the sins done beforetime, in the forbearance of God; for the showing, I say, of his righteousness at this present season: that he might himself be just, and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus." This propitiatory sacrifice was offered that God might pardon the sinner and be just while doing so, and this justification must then be accepted by faith in the Christ.

1 Cor. 1:30: "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us wisdom from God, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." He is the redeeming price given of God answering the demands of justice.

Eph. 1:7: "In whom we have our redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our tresspasses, according to the riches of his grace." See verse 14: "Which is an earnest of our inheritance, unto the redemption of God's own possession unto the praise of his glory."

Titus 2:14: "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." Having been sold under bondage to sin, and having no means for redemption. Christ came and offered himself, a sacrifice to be testified in due time, that man might be reinstated into the favor of God.

1 Peter 1:18-20: "Knowing that ye were redeemed, not with corruptible things, with silver or gold, from your vain manner of life handed down from your fathers; but with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of Christ: who was foreknown indeed before the foundation of the world, but was manifested at the end of the times for your sake." The thought that Christ redeemed the world by living in it, and teaching men and working miracles is not the thought in any Scripture of either the Old or New Testament. That he persuaded men by the power of his truth, that he condemned sin not simply by the words he spoke, that he smote the world with a beautiful white life, and that in all this he becomes our guide, is true, and many Scriptures have this beautiful thought. But he made a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of men, through which God saw that justice was answered, and that He could therefore be just while extending, in the name of the Christ, the forgiveness of sins.

If possible stronger statements from Scripture will appear a week later.

Our Country Churches

By W. T. Moore

In the earlier history of the religious movement of the Disciples, the country church held an honorable and important position. It was, indeed, nearly all there was to the movement. In a few of the smaller towns and villages the movement early gained a permanent footing, but in nearly all the larger towns and cities little or no progress was made even where a church or churches may have been started.

The reason for this state of things, in the early days, is not far to seek. The movement itself laid a distinct emphasis upon the common people and made its appeal chiefly to them, on the ground both of their need of it and of its need of them. There was a simplicity in the gospel, as proclaimed by the Disciple preachers, which at once arrested the attention and commanded the fealty of the common people as they were scattered throughout the country districts. These people had not become accustomed to the "domineering priesthood" which in the early days of the nineteenth century seemed to have almost complete control over the city churches; consequently the "new gospel," as it was called by some, or the "old gospel," as the Disciples themselves called it quickly found an abiding place in the hearts of the honest yeomanry of the farming districts.

America was at that time known mainly as an agricultural country. In fact the country was nearly everything; for it was in the country where the real riches were to be found.

Some have thought that Mr. Campbell made a great mistake when he located at Bethany, Va., instead of locating in New York, Boston or some other great commercial and intellectual center. This mistake, however, is not very apparent, when all the facts are taken into the account. Some of these facts it may be well to mention.

(1) All great movements that have swayed the world have found their leaders among the common people, and, for the most part, among farmers. Moses was not fit to lead the Israelites out of bondage, although he had many years of training in Egyptian universities, until he had lived forty years in the land of Midian, tending his father-in-law's flocks. It would be surprising, if the facts were correctly gathered and stated as to how many eminent men in the world's history, at some time in their lives have been farmers. So far as the Disciple movement is concerned it is certain that nearly all of their most eminent ministers have come from the farming classes. Nor is there yet very much of a reaction against this state of things. It is still true that our most promising young men in attendance at our colleges and universities hail from the farming districts.

(2) Another important reason why the movement should have started where it did is found in the fact that it was impossible in the early days of the movement to make much impression upon the cities. Little can be done with a church in a city without a suitable building, well located. It has often been charged against our forefathers that when they did attempt to do something in a city they virtually hid themselves away by selecting some unsuitable place for the house of worship. But really this was a matter over which they had no control. With no means at command by which they could build houses of worship suitable to compete with those of the richer religious peoples, the only thing they could do was to get a hold of some sort in whatever location offered them the best opportunity. It is perfectly true that these efforts were often almost fruitless because of the unsuitableness of the location selected and the inadequacy of the building; but, after all, we must judge all these efforts by the peculiar conditions surrounding the movement at that time, and then we will have more patience with the small beginnings and those who were doing the best they could, and often at great personal sacrifice.

(3) These feeble city efforts were finally saved from utter failures by additions from the country churches. Some of our wealthier members in the country began to move toward the towns and cities, and for the most part the cause in these cities was really saved from a complete breakdown by the help received from the country churches.

I am not persuaded, therefore, that Mr. Campbell made a mistake or that it would have been better for our cause in the long run if we could have begun our religious movement in the cities instead of in the country. But there was another predominant factor in our movement which seemed to exactly fit the soil on which it had to grow. The movement was, especially in its beginning, anticlerical. It was emphatically opposed to Burns' "Spiritual Excisemen." The country churches for a long time made no attempt to have regular pastors, such as are now generally recognized. The elders of each church formed a sort of teaching college whose duty it was to read the scriptures, and expound certain portions for the edification of the brethren on each Lord's Day when the whole church met together to break bread. The breaking of bread was the chief thing to be attended to, as this was the matter which brought the disciples together. They met for that very purpose, and consequently everything, as far as possible, was made to contribute to the great end of setting forth the Lord's death and suffering.

This simple but comprehensive service was not always attended to with a supreme dignity; nor were the accompanying songs and preaching quite in harmony with our present notions of culture; but all the same it could be generally said at the close of these services, "see how these brethren love one another," and that fact alone accentuated the gospel of salvation much more strongly than anything we see in our modern church life where the elements of simplicity and earnestness are overshadowed by stereoperfunticity.

These, with other considerations which might be presented, make it certain that we are much indebted to our country churches for the present position we occupy as a religious people. These churches were undoubtedly the parent centers from which our whole movement took its most forceful type; and while some of the crudeness which belonged to the early days might well be dispensed with at present, it is not altogether improbable that, in some respects, we have not improved upon the church life which was developed during the earlier periods of the movement. At any rate, it is worth while looking carefully into the present state of our country churches to see what can be done for their relief; for it is undeniably true that something must be done, or else their existence cannot possibly be of very long duration.

Having made a careful study of the condition of these churches, during the last six or seven years, I feel somewhat competent to deal with the problem, both from an appreciation of their early usefulness and a deep sympathy with them in their present almost helpless condition. Consequently in a few articles I shall hope to call attention at least to some of the actual conditions as they now exist, and to offer such a remedy as may seem to be the most practicable under all the circumstances of the case. Meanwhile, I will be glad to receive from time to time suggestions from any of our preachers, or from any members of these country churches that will help to throw light upon the important subject under consideration.

TURN OVER TIME.

When Nature Hints About the Food.

When there's no relish to any food and all that one eats doesn't seem to do any good then is the time to make a turn over in the diet, for that's Nature's way of dropping a hint that the food isn't the kind required.

"For a number of years I followed railroad work, much of it being office work of a trying nature. Meal times were our busiest and eating too much and too quickly of food such as is commonly served in hotels and restaurants, these together with the sedentary habits were not long in giving me dyspepsia and stomach trouble which reduced my weight from 205 to 160 pounds.

"There was little relish in any food and none of it seemed to do me any good. It seemed the more I ate the poorer I got and was always hungry before another meal, no matter how much I had eaten.

"Then I commenced a fair trial of Grape-Nuts and was surprised how a small saucer of it would carry me along, strong and with satisfied appetite, until the next meal, with no sensations of hunger, weakness or distress as before.

"I have been following this diet now for several months and my improvement has been so great all the others in my family have taken up the use of Grape-Nuts with complete satisfaction and much improvement in health and brain power.

"American people undoubtedly eat hurriedly, have lots of worry, thus hindering digestion and therefore need a food that is predigested and concentrated in nourishment." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Echoes of the National Baptist Convention.

By Edgar D. Jones.

The Convention of the Northern Baptist Missionary Societies met in Cleveland, May 16 to 24. It was in many ways a great convention. About three thousand delegates were present, among whom were men of national reputation. The day sessions were held in the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church of which Mr. Rockefeller is a member, while the evening meetings were assembled in Gray's Armory.

It was the writer's pleasure to attend two of the most important sessions and to keep in close touch with the work of the entire convention through the daily press. A masterful address was delivered by Dr. Alexander Blackburn of Salem, Mass., on "Our Present Duty in Bible Work." The speaker said that the watch word of his address was "Work with the Bible and not at it." Furthermore he declared that the Baptists and Disciples were the only religious peoples who took the Bible and it alone as their rule of faith and practice. He expressed the desire that the two bodies might be one at no distant date. Dr. Blackburn plead earnestly for the Old Book. "The Bereans," he said, searched the scriptures to see if these things were so. Now, too many of us are searching these things to see if the scriptures are so." In the course of his address Dr. Blackburn said that however much we may differ from the radical school of biblical critics their work is leading people to study the scriptures with new zeal and diligence.

By far the most interesting address from the view point of a Disciple was that of Prof. A. S. Hobart of Crosier Theological Seminary on "Denominationalism, its Scope and Obligations." To the writer the subject seemed something of a misnomer, for the address was simply a presentation of Baptist principles, but a superb presentation nevertheless. The speaker with great power and brilliance showed the reasons his people had for leaving other churches. He touched on three points of divergence! First, ecclesiastical courts; second, false theories of regeneration; and third, the question of baptism. In speaking of the latter Dr. Hobart said that there are just four things to baptism. First, it is an act of obedience, second, a vow of consecration, third, a symbol, symbolizing the great central facts of the gospel, and fourth, baptism is a light house. Under this fourth head he went on to show that as the lighthouse enables the mariner to get his bearings and safely reach the port, so baptism points out to the sinner that in order to be saved he must be merged into Christ, that he must become a new creature in Christ Jesus his Lord. "Baptism," said the speaker, "is an expression of our faith."

Dr. Hobart closed his address by exhorting his fellow Baptists to hold fast to the principles of their denomination, but that they should saturate their loyalty with the love set forth in Corinthians, the 13th chapter. "Cultivate a spirit of receptivity to new truth," he said. "Baptists have not pumped the well dry." At the conclusion of this address there were calls for P. S. Henson, of Boston, who occupied a seat on the platform.

In a characteristic speech Dr. Henson said: "I don't believe in denominationalism and I don't believe there ought to be any. The church that admits all regardless of conditions of life or race is the church that ought to be preserved. Sects ought to be done away with. I am not especially fond of the name Baptist. We did not call ourselves Baptists, but the world flung it at us and it stuck. Baptists by any other name would be as sound. I think we ought to wear the name Christian and I believe we'll come to it by and by."

On Sunday, May 22, the pulpits of nearly all the evangelical churches of Cleveland were occupied by the visiting Baptist ministers. At the Franklin Circle Church Dr. J. W. Conley of Omaha, Neb., filled the pulpit and after preaching a strong and helpful sermon he sat down with us at the table of the Lord. Mrs. Princess Long then sang a hymn that "dissolved us into ecstasies and brought all heaven before our eyes."

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

mirers, the whole assembly rising to its feet to give assent.

Now, all these movements, from the Dome, appear to indicate wholesome conditions. Certainly they show a great advance since the new Declaration of Independence by the old Seceder Presbyterian minister, Thomas Campbell, of Washington county, Pa., in 1809, when a Presbyterian grocer hesitated to sell a neighbor kerosine oil to light a Methodist church lest he might encourage the teaching of false doctrine! We have but one suggestion for all these brethren, and that is, in considering plans of union it may be well to consider the expediency of a restoration of the original unity and life of the church as it existed and was taught by the apostles in the New Testament church before the rise of Roman Catholicism or the era of denominationalism. On such a basis we can all stand together, and against such a united church the powers of the unseen world cannot prevail.

Praying is too often a cheap substitute for paying. The man who has no heart to give has no heart to pray. It is impossible to fellowship God in your heart and the world with your money. Do you not know we can not serve God and mammon? If you do not, you will.

SISTER'S TRICK.

But all Came out Right.

How a sister played a trick that brought rosy health to a coffee fiend is an interesting tale:

"I was a coffee fiend—a trembling, nervous physical wreck, yet clinging to, the poison that stole away my strength because for a fleeting moment it stimulated my weakened powers. I mocked at Postum and would have none of it.

"One day my sister, Mrs. U. S. Showalter, substituted a cup of crisp, hot Postum for my morning cup of coffee but did not tell me what it was. I noticed the richness of it and remarked that the coffee tasted fine but my sister did not tell me I was drinking Postum for fear I might not take any more.

"She kept the secret and kept giving me Postum instead of coffee until I grew stronger, more tireless, got a better color in my hollow cheeks and a clearness to my eyes, then she told me of the health-giving, nerve-strengthening life-saver she had given me in place of my morning coffee. From that time I became a disciple of Postum and no words can do justice to the good this cereal drink can do. I will not try to tell, for only after having used it can one be convinced of its merits." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial shows Postum's power to rebuild what coffee has destroyed. There's a reason.

Profanity.

"Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile."—Ps. 34:13.

Reverence God: His truth profess;
Take not thy Maker's name in vain.
Can He hold guiltless lips profane,
Who sits enthroned in holiness?

Reverence Man. Noble and great,
For highest Heaven his spirit framed,
Let him be honored, not profaned;
Dare not corrupt, but elevate.

Rev'rence thyself. Keep thy lips clean.
Speak grace and virtue, truth and right.
Words foul or false but stain and blight

The soul that should be fair, serene.

Rev'rence all good. Profaneness breeds

The vilest brood that curses earth.
Pure thoughts, pure words, of heavenly birth,

Do rank in Heaven with purest deeds.

BESETTING SINS.

"Therefore let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Hebrews 12:1.

The preceding chapter has been called "the Westminster Abbey of the Bible" because it records the names of the heroes of faith in the old dispensation. Having referred to their achievements and triumphs, the author of the Hebrew letter exhorts us in the language above, in view of so many witnesses, to lay aside every weight, together with our besetting sins, in order that we may run successfully the race that is set before us. The reference here is to the Grecian game of racing, in which the runners, stripping themselves of every unnecessary impediment, would run the race before the great multitude of witnesses, gathered on either side as interested onlookers.

The race set before us is the Christian race, and the whole spiritual universe may be said to be witnesses of our efforts to win the heavenly prize. We are exhorted to disencumber ourselves from every impeding weight and every besetting sin, in order to run in such a race. Instead of dealing with sin in the abstract, let us specify a few particular sins which are sure to prevent us from winning the prize:

1. Selfishness. This includes a great many sins, such as avarice, greed, covetousness. No spirit is more antagonistic to Christianity than the spirit of selfishness. The mind of Christ was just exactly the opposite. (Read Phil. 2:5-8.) Unless this mind be in us also, we cannot be disciples of Christ.

2. "An Evil Heart of Unbelief." It was this that prevented the first generation of Hebrews that left Egypt from entering into the promised land. (Hebrews 3:12.) The same evil will prevent us from entering into the heavenly Canaan. We must cultivate faith in God and learn to trust Him implicitly.

3. Worldliness. John tells us to "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him." (1 John 2:15.) We may love all that is true and beautiful and good in the world, but we may not love its wickedness, its lusts of the flesh, its allurements, nor allow ourselves to become so enthralled with material things as to prevent us from running this Christian race. The world and its glory will soon pass away, but the prize for which we run endureth forever.

4. An unbridled tongue. If any man thinketh himself to be religious while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain." (James 1:26.) Who can overestimate the evil which an unbridled tongue may work? It has blighted reputations, made enemies of friends, broken up families, disturbed the peace of neighborhoods and churches, and even caused war between nations.

5. Unfaithfulness to the public worship. (See Hebrew 10:25.) How many of us are neglecting the assembling of ourselves together as the custom of some is? Here is an opportunity for fidelity and for witness-bearing which should not be neglected. It is the beginning of apostasy.

6. Worry and anxiety. We cannot

The blood is impure, weak and impoverished—a condition indicated by pimples and other eruptions on the face and body, by deficient vitality, loss of appetite, lack of strength, and want of animation.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Make the blood pure, vigorous and rich, create appetite, give vitality, strength and animation, and cure all eruptions. Have the whole family begin to take them today.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has been used in our family for some time, and always with good results. Last spring I was all run down and got a bottle of it, and as usual received great benefit." Miss BEULAH BOYCE, Stowe, Vt.

Hood's Sarsaparilla promises to cure and keeps the promise.

win the Christian race with our minds distracted with cares and anxieties. Jesus knew this when he said to his disciples and also to us, "Be not therefore anxious for the morrow: for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." (Matthew 6:34.)

7. Weariness in well doing. It is not enough to run well for a season, and then give up the race. Many preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and other Christian workers, become discouraged because the results of their labor seem to be so long delayed; and yet the Apostle Paul urges us not to grow weary in well doing, "for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." (Gal. 6:3.) Let us sow the seed and patiently wait for the harvest.

The remedy for these sins. If we undertake to combat each of these sins in our own strength, we shall fail. There is one remedy and one only, and that is to enthrone Christ in our hearts. To love Him sincerely and devotedly is to come into fellowship with His great plans and purposes, and to be freed from the dominion of these sins which war against the soul. Only "the expulsive power of a new affection," as Dr. Chalmers called it, can drive out from our hearts our besetting sins. As light is the remedy for darkness, water for thirst, and food for hunger, so the love of the true, the pure and the good, as they are embodied in Christ, is the remedy for every evil passion.

Prayer. Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee that Thou hast called us to run this Christian race, and that through Christ Thou hast enabled us to put away our besetting sins and in His strength to run with patience the race that is set before us. Wilt thou help us thus to lay aside every weight and every besetting sin, and so to run that we may obtain the prize of everlasting life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHRIST RISEN.—

Mark 28:1-15.

Memory verses, 9, 10.

Golden text. "Now is Christ risen from the dead." 1 Cor. 15:20.

Life and Resurrection.

It was fitting and natural that a life of sacrifice, the whole purpose of which was to exemplify the principles of self-sacrifice, and loving service, should lead to a sacrificial death. But it was equally fitting—one may almost say, inevitable—that such a death should be only a passing episode in that life, and not its consummation. Into one point of burning brilliancy was focused all the radiance of that loving and sacrificial life, and again, like rays of light that have passed through and beyond their focus, it was diffused into a more general illumination. Viewed from one side, that focal point of the divine life in the flesh was the crucifixion. Viewed from the other side, it was the resurrection. Both the crucifixion and the resurrection of Jesus get their meaning, their spiritual value and their credibility from the life of Jesus. The resurrection was no vulgar wonder, no spectacular and vain-glorious display of power. It was a coherent and consistent part of his life.

The Need of the Resurrection.

It was not only in the highest sense natural that Jesus should conquer death and defeat the tomb, but there was the greatest need that he should do so in a way which would carry conviction to his own disciples. Those who assert that the story of the resurrection is a fiction originated and disseminated by his disciples, do not take into account the reluctance of the disciples themselves to accept it. The crucifixion left them disheartened and scattered. Their lord was dead. He whom they had hoped would deliver Israel had fallen a victim of Jewish hate and Roman tyranny. It was small wonder if Peter's thoughts turned again to his nets, and if the eleven were almost ready to take up their old life where they had left it, with only the regretful memory of those three golden years. What, short of the bodily appearance of their risen lord, could have convinced them that his cause had not ended in failure, and that his death was not the end but the beginning of his work; that it marked not the collapse but the establishment of his kingdom? In the mood in which the crucifixion left them, the disciples were incapable of even imagining anything so good as the resurrection—much less of fabricating a consistent story of it and sealing their testimony to it with years of labor and final death.

Preaching the Resurrection.

The resurrection of Christ had a far larger place in the apostolic preaching than it has to-day. Peter's first sermon, on Pentecost, hinged on the fact of the resurrection. His audience knew Jesus well enough as an historical personage. They knew of His life and of His death. They had also the expectation of a Messiah who should come as the messenger of Jehovah for the redemption of Israel. Peter's task was to prove that the historical Jesus, whom they knew and whom they had killed, was actually the Messiah whom they expected. To prove this he relied largely upon the fact of the resurrection. The argument was the same in the other apostolic sermons preached in the early years at Jerusalem. Paul introduced a still larger and richer use of the resurrection of Jesus when he made it the basis for belief in personal immortality for his followers. Christ is now "the first fruits of them that slept," and the first fruits i sto be followed by a harvest. "Because he lives, ye shall live also." This is the burden of Paul's argument in the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians. And it is the meaning of the resurrection which has made it a priceless treasure to the Christian world. As an evidence of the Messiahship of Jesus it is worth much. As a sign that death is but an episode in life, that the victory of death has been turned into permanent defeat, that there is an endless life of blessedness awaiting the followers of Christ, it is worth vastly more.

WHAT PAUL TEACHES ME ABOUT RISING ABOVE DISCOURAGEMENT.—2 Cor. 4:7-18

For the Leader.

1. Our topic this evening is one in which every one should have an interest. Discouragement is common to all. No life is exempt from it. There is scarcely a day that is not spoiled more or less with its moments of the down-cast spirit. Those who have put their trust in One who is able to keep—the people who believe in and serve God—should not suffer in this way as those who are not believers. We are the children of the Kingdom, and we should not lose faith in our King. Many are the examples, among the followers of the Lord, of power to rise above discouragement. But, of all those who have found out this secret, Paul seems to have exercised this gift beyond all the rest. He suffered more than any other one of the early witnesses of the Lord, and he learned to lean more fully upon his source of help and strength.

For the Members.

1. We are not to suppose that Paul reached a point in his discipleship where he was not conscious of the displeasure caused by the many things that came upon him. They had their effect upon him, and he seems to have felt them as keenly as we do to-day, but he did not let them discourage him. He says, "troubled on every side, but not distressed;" "perplexed, but not in despair;" "persecuted, but not forsaken;" "cast down, but not destroyed."

2. So here was a servant of the Lord suffering to the very limit—an ocean of trouble rolling over him, but every time rising and righting himself like a splendid ship in the storm. Who can tell the sorrows of that man? Who can ever know the feelings that must have weighed upon him at times like a mountain? It must be approached only by those who suffer here; it is to be told in heaven. Yet he does not give up. He never talks of quitting. He goes right on. Why this? He says in one place that he knows Him in Whom he has believed, and, further, that he is persuaded that He is able to keep that which he has committed to Him.

3. This, then, is what Paul teaches us about rising above discouragement: Our troubles are not able to overthrow us, if we put our trust in God. If they are not able to prevail against us, why be discouraged? For the sake of Him who will give us the victory, and remembering what He suffered for us, we are willing to endure, knowing that the reason for this, while not fully manifest now, will be made clear in the life to come. It is part of the plan of the Father. That is, it is made necessary in a world of sin in order that the Father's plans of love may be fulfilled—His plans concerning us. While, in the nature of the case, it is not possible to have the Christian life without these discouragements, Paul believed that the right would triumph, and that the doors of the right would not be overcome.

4. He had faith in his purpose, his plan, his creed, his Ideal. In the face of death it was the same with Paul. He reasoned in verse 14 that the Father who raised up Jesus would raise him up at the last day. They might kill him, but he would live again. He could face the prospects of cruel death with a hope like this. He knew that the only uncertain element in his salvation was his own part. If he did his part, the Father would do His. This must be kept in mind, or we may find ourselves coming into possession of the notion that Paul was a fatalist.—This is not so. There is a vast difference between fatalism and the belief that Paul held concerning the safety of those who put their trust in God. Paul knew that his acts had to conform to a certain standard, or else he was lost. He must be sure that he went in the right way, but he believed, also, that he who did the will of the Lord, would come out all right. Even death was not a defeat, for the power that brought Jesus again from the dead would raise His followers up.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Oh, Lord, help me that when I go down into the waters of sorrow and discouragement I may hold thy hand with a firm grip.

Ministerial Exchange.

Miss Sylvie Keener can be secured for meetings during the summer, commencing June 1, as soloist or leader of song. Address 1312 27th St., Des Moines, Ia.

The church at Mozier, Ill., wants a preacher for one-fourth time. Will pay $100.

The Central Church, Peoria, Ill., is looking for a young man (single) to become associate pastor with their present minister and preach for their mission at Hewett St. This is a splendid opportunity for the right man to gain experience and do a good work. Address G. B. Van Arsdall.

G. W. Coffman, will preach for one or more churches within reach of St. Louis. Address care M. I. Payne, Old Orchard, Mo.

C. J. Sharp, pastor Hammond, Ind., has been granted leave of absence during July, August and September. During this time he can hold one meeting. Address at Hammond, Ind.

J. Elza Holley, Everest, Kan., would like to hear from churches in Missouri and Kansas in need of a pastor.

Any church desiring pulpit supply or planning to locate a graduate preacher should address The Ministerial Association, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, Box 1.

G. A. Hess closes his work at Nora Springs, Iowa, about September 1, and would like a church in eastern Illinois.

HOW TO FIND OUT.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains the linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it, or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, and a book that tells all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing be sure to mention that you read this generous offer in the "St. Louis Christian Evangelist." Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

or western Indiana. He has had about five years' experience and can furnish references.

Wanted at once, a minister at West Rupert, Vt. Can pay $600 and perhaps better for a good man, parsonage included. Man with family preferred. E. P. Flower, Rupert, Vt.

W. A. Roush, who has had a vacation granted him of a few weeks, would like to hold a meeting some time the last of July or August. Will make terms very moderate. Address, 502 E. Vine St. Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

"Room Up Front."

In the jammed and jouncing street-car I was hanging to a strap, Trying hard to keep from sitting in some total stranger's lap;
Every time we stopped, some others scrambled hurriedly aboard.
While in tones that thrilled with earnestness the blue-clad man implored:
"Oh, there's plenty room up front there, if you'll move along and hunt—Step a little lively, people, for there's Room Up Front."

If we'd heed that little lesson as we struggle day by day;
Toiling onward and molling onward in a dull, half-hearted way;
If we'd make a resolution that we'd do our work so well
That unless the others hustled we'd be certain to excel,
We would feel a lot less crowded as we do our daily stunt—
If we'd "step a little lively" there'd be Room Up Front."

SUMMER IN MICHIGAN.

This is the time to plan your summer vacation. Michigan is the place you are seeking. Send name and address to H. F. Moeller, G. P. A., Pere Marquette Railroad, Detroit, Michigan, for booklets "Michigan Summer Resorts" and "Michigan East Coast Resorts."

Our Budget

—We are receiving many compliments for our Convention Number, although it was only a starter.

—We have a few extra copies on hand which we will gladly supply on request to those who may wish to distribute them in their congregations or among their friends who are not readers of the paper.

—The postponement of the dedication of our World's Fair building one week on account of the rain, gives us time to get our exhibits in better order and to collect additional funds to pay for the building. See further notice elsewhere.

—Our Missouri State Convention which convenes at Carrollton June 17-22, should be one of the largest in our history, combining as it does the Missouri Christian Missionary Society, the C. W. B. M., the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Convention. We look for an old time rally of Missouri Disciples, and for such an enthusiastic convention as will send all our general interests forward with accelerated speed.

—The rains of the past week have interfered materially with plans and programs, and especially with the planting and sowing of the farmers. But let us be patient, for both in material and spiritual things we shall "reap in due season if we faint not."

—A great many strangers are now in the city, and among them a liberal representation of our members whose presence in our churches on Sunday makes a notable addition to our audiences. In one of our churches last Lord's Day there were more visitors from abroad than resident members, in the congregation. Besides several states, England and the Hawaii Islands were represented.

—The Christian Endeavor Hotel, near the World's Fair, dedicated its new and large auditorium on Tuesday evening of this week with appropriate exercises. We are glad to learn that it is receiving a large patronage from the Christian people of the country.

—If for any reason your Sunday school did not observe Children's Day on last Lord's Day, see to it that it is not omitted on next Lord's Day, or a later Sunday. We have not yet reached the limits of our possibilities in this direction by a long ways.

—Hufford, Kansas, has called G. W. Alford for another year.

—J. C. Hanna, of Laurens, Ia., has received a call from Pawnee, O. T.

—Colby Hall, of New York, is to begin work at Hillsboro, Texas, July 1.

—Hopedale, O., has E. F. Sergissor, of Rochester, N. Y., for its new minister.

—The church at Terrell, Texas, has extended a call to N. J. Wright, of Paris, Ill.

—S. A. Ennefer, of Edinburg, Ill., enters upon his new field of work at Princeton, Mo., next Lord's day.

—President Hieronymous, of Eureka College, is to deliver the Commencement address of Butler College on June 23.

—"The convention number of the Christian-Evangelist is received. It is a very fine number, good in every way." Helen E. Moses.

—The illness of Bro. Aten's wife has necessitated his tendering his resignation at Van Buren, Ark., to which place he had recently been called.

—A. R. Adams delivered the memorial address at Fairfield, Iowa, this year and had it published in full by the city press.

—The Sunday-school at Hopkinsville, Ky., raised $208 Sunday, May 29. This was an increase over last year of $47.00. Thos. W. Long is the Superintendent.

—Recent improvements in the church property have added materially to the appearance of the Augusta, Ga., church over which Howard T. Cree now presides.

—R. N. Hopkins, state Sunday-school evangelist of Kentucky, speaks enthusiastically of the unity, co-operation and progress of the four congregations in Lexington.

—The Children's Day offering starts well. There is every indication of a decided gain in the offerings. The Sunday-schools should be prompt in forwarding their contributions.

—"I held three services and rode 30 miles to the baptism of a new convert." This quotation from J. A. Holton, in California, seems to indicate that the day of the circuit rider is not over.

—L. A. Chapman of Grand Valley, Ont., has just given his illustrated sermon lecture on "Altar Stairs" to a crowded house. He is to give the address at the Odd Fellows' anniversary next Lord's day.

—W. S. Dickinson, of Cincinnati, and Frank Coop and wife and daughter, of England, have been spending a few days at the Fair, and worshipped at the Central church in this city on last Lord's day.

—Bro. T. M. Westrup has commenced the translation of Farrar's "Life of Christ." Such a work translated into Spanish ought to prove of very great assistance to the evangelistic work in Mexico.

—Three hundred and fifty students have been at Hiram College during the year. The graduating class numbers thirty-six. President Wakefield will preach the Baccalaureate sermon on June 19.

At the Delphic Semi-Centennial, Prof. Dean will read a history and Robert Moffett and others will speak.

—A prominent man will address the class on commencement afternoon, June 23, if political duties do not imperatively forbid. All friends of the college are cordially invited to be present.

—President W. E. Garrison, of Butler College, occupied the pulpit of the Central church, Indianapolis, last Lord's day, while A. B. Philpott preached the Baccalaureate sermon for Kentucky University.

—W. J. Lockhart, who has done a fine work at Fort Collins, Col., having increased the membership very largely and wiped out the debt, has resigned for health reasons. He goes to Des Moines for the summer.

—Twenty-three evening addresses were sufficient to organize a church with 27 members at Presho, S. Dak. This church will co-operate with Oacoma, S. Dak., in securing a pastor. W. J. Dodge was the evangelist.

—B. W. Huntsman and wife of Adrian, Mich., expect to leave in July on a visit to his parents in Melbourne, Australia. He will preach at the Grote Street Church, Adelaide, until the end of the year. His successor at Adrian has not yet been chosen.

—Mrs. Alderman, of the Mexican mission, her children and Miss Eubank have left for their visit to the states. They were quarantined at Saltillo. Mrs. Alderman will attend the Texas state convention and deliver an address on "The Needs of Mexico."

—Geo. W. Ranshaw spoke at Broadway Christian Church, Van Buren, Ark., on Sunday. He passed through St. Louis to see our World's Fair building.

—J. C. Coggins having become president of the College at Waynesville, N. C., J. J. Harper has been elected president of Atlanta Christian College.

—Cephas Shelburne, of Huntington, Ind., delivered the literary address before the graduates of the Roanoke, Ind., schools; and the baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of the Huntington High School. The sermon was published in the daily papers.

—O. A. Ishmael, Drexel, Mo., has just paid a visit to his old charge at Haden's Grove, Henry Co., where he ministered four years. He reports having had a good time, the church, under Bro. Scott, in a growing condition, and three confessing on the occasion of his visit.

—The union question is to the fore in Canada. Dr. Allison, a prominent Methodist, thinks it possible. The Presbyterian general assembly will discuss it, and Baptists and Free Baptists in the Maritime provinces, as our correspondent intimates, are almost agreed to unite.

—At a union meeting of the ministers' association in San Francisco, representatives of the denominations told what Jesus would protest against in their denominations were He present to-day. We shall look forward with some degree of interest to a fuller report of this meeting.

—The receipts for Foreign Missions during the month of May amounted to $14,468.27, a gain over the corresponding month last year of $3,078.15. The churches, as churches, gave $10,024.99, a gain of $3,310.25. It is hoped there will be a large gain from the Sunday-schools during June.

—R. H. Bateman, pastor at Whittier, Cal., speaks very highly of R. L. McHatton who has just closed a meeting there. Under his preaching he says, "rubber necks are not at all popular, neither the snapping of watches nor gazing at the clock on the wall. He demands and has attention to the front."

—The members at Newark, Ohio, are eagerly looking forward to the dedication of their new church. The pastor has been compelled to give much of his time all along to the innumerable details connected with the building of the new church. All are anxious to have the entire cost provided for by dedication day.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for May contained the address delivered at the great Missionary Rally in Buffalo by Dr. Anson G. Chester, upon "The Dignity of the Missionary Enterprise." Bro. Chester ought to feel complimented, that an expert judge like Mr. A. McLean regarded his address as worthy of special publication.

—The last Sunday in May was a great day at the West Side Church in San Francisco. The new house of worship which was dedicated is a magnificent structure, and considering the history of the church and its small beginning only a few years ago, no praise can be too great for those who have brought about such a result. Among those most deserving is Wm. A. Gardiner.

—The church at Washburn, Ill., will observe the fortieth anniversary of its organization with special exercises on June 26. The former pastors and others are requested to send greetings. The church has given five ministers of the word to the brotherhood. Bro. H. H. Jenner writes that it will be a joy to have any or all of these present. There were seven additions to the church by primary obedience in May.

—J. P. Crank writes that W. G. Heamer, who has been associated with Christian scientists, has joined our church at Minden Mines, Mo. He is a man of experience in the ministry and was known by Bro. Crank fourteen years ago. "He will be a great help to this part of the country. He is preaching half-time at Minden and the other half at Moundville, Mo., where his home will be."

—The $20,000 pipe organ for the new Thomas concert hall in Chicago has been awarded to the firm of Lyon and Healy of that city. It is especially designed for orchestral work and has many new features, among which are an electro-pneumatic action and a movable key-desk. The organ is to be set up ready for use by Nov. 1. Among orchestral organs in present use it will be second only to that in the auditorium in the same city.

—In view of the convention at North Yakima, it is interesting to note that more of our churches in Washington have held protracted meetings this year and more have regular preaching than ever before. Last year about one-third of the preachers in the state resigned, while this year only a few have done so. The reports presented will show an average net gain probably of more than 25 per cent. in membership. The missionary spirit is growing.

—The receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society from our churches, during the month of May, show an increase over the same period last year of $1,508.41. Among the more than 900 churches contributing 376 made no offering last year. This is a very pleasing advance. But, it is essential that none of our churches that gave last year, should fail to do so this year. Their loyal support in the raising of the $200,000 for this work is necessary.

—In a letter from Sister Helen E. Moses, corresponding secretary, C. W. B. M., received too late for mention in our last issue, she says, speaking of the convention in St. Louis next October: "India, Mexico and Porto Rico will have representatives on our program, also our home field, with the negro and mountain schools and the university Bible work. We expect a strong and interesting program." Our sisters never fail in giving us an interesting program and we expect that the coming one will be especially good.

—We have received one of the new maps which are being sent out by the Board of Church Extension this month to the preachers to be hung in all the churches. It is a striking exhibit of the wonderful work done by this board during its fifteen years and a half of history. The map came in a tube in good condition and now adorns our office. The map is sent out to be hung in your church for all the people to see. If you want a second one for your own study the board will no doubt gladly mail you another. Try it by sending a card to G. W. Muckey, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—In sending his contribution of $50 for the World's Fair Pavilion. Bro. C. C. Chapman, formerly of Chicago, but now of Fullerton, California, says: "I am sure this is a worthy enterprise and I commend the spirit which inspired it. Let the thousands at your great Fair ask the question, 'Who and what are the people calling themselves Disciples of Christ and their church the Christian Church, and find right there at least a partial answer. Thus this will prove a great educational feature, and helpful in many ways.' What we need is more men of public spirit, who have regard for the wider interests of the kingdom of God.

Those visiting the Fair, and wishing to go to the pavilion of the Christian church, may take the intramural railway, going east or west from the terminal near the main entrance, and get off at Station 12, and walk north about the distance of a city block. Be sure to attend the dedication next Saturday, June 11, 3 p. m. Let us make it an occasion.

—L. L. Carpenter has dedicated the beautiful new house of worship at Elizabethton, Tenn. He reports the minister, Bro. Buck, "a Godly man, a splendid preacher, a good pastor." There were 3,000 in attendance at the dedication and 15 preachers among them. It was the greatest day the old city had had for many years. Milligan College is only a few miles away, and is in a prosperous condition, doing much educational work for young men for the ministry.

—The beautiful new brick church at Whitesville, Ky., has been dedicated, R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., preached the sermon and assisted in raising the amount of the debt. The church is easily the best and most commodious of the Protestant churches of the county outside of Owensboro. Its seating capacity is 600. The fixtures and appliances are the very best. The amount of the debt was $2,650 and a little over $3,000 was raised. A bountiful basket-dinner was served to the 3,000 or more people in attendance. Bro. H. C. Ford, of Nebo, Ky., is the efficient minister, and it was largely through his business ability and enthusiasm that the church was erected.

—The Englewood Church of Christ, Chicago, have for some time been of the opinion that they had secured a lot for their new building. This was on the corner of Stewart Ave. and 67th. The money was raised but the parties owning the property failed in "delivering." The congregation, however, are congratulating themselves on having just come into possession at a bargain, of a beautiful property on the same avenue only one square north of the corner referred to. It has a frontage of 100 feet by 175 feet in depth with a stone church occupying 60 feet and on the remaining 40 feet a two-story frame dwelling. On the rear of the lot stands a frame chapel connected with the church building proper, which latter was erected eight years ago. The Cumberland Presbyterians, whose congregation was recently united with the First Presbyterian Church, South, of Englewood, have sold it to the Christian Church and their present church property will apply as part payment. The work of remodeling will at once be begun and it is hoped that the premises will be ready for occupancy some time in July.

An Old-Time Missouri Rally.

Let us make the annual convention at Carrollton, June 17 to 22, an old time rally of Missouri Disciples. It will be the first meeting together of our united forces in one convention, and it should be a gathering of unusual interest, magnitude and enthusiasm. Let us show how essentially one and how heartily in agreement, are the different departments of our work in the state—State Missions, Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Christian Endeavor and Bible-school work. The young and old, male and female, preacher and lay worker, will meet together and each rejoice in the presence and work of the other.

No side-show like the World's Fair should be permitted to interfere with that convention of Christian workers engaged in the King's business. What more delightful season of the year is there for holding a convention than the month of June? It will be worth while to make the trip, just to see old Missouri with her fields of waving grain, her young growing crops, her green meadows, starred with daisies and dandelions, her forests robed in fresh garments of summer, and her gardens aflame with June roses. And then Carrollton is one of the older Missouri towns inhabited by a prosperous and hospitable people, who will extend to all a hearty welcome.

There is need, too, in every department of our work in the state, of the fresh impetus that will come from a large and enthusiastic convention. Great demands are made upon the Christian churches of Missouri and great problems are before us. A people numbering 175,000 or more, in the State, have weighty responsibilities. Let us go to Carrollton in a mighty throng from all sections of the State, and lift still higher the banner which we bear, and impart new vigor to all the departments of our work. But let us go in the spirit of prayer and of devout consecration to the Master's work.

Dedication of Our World's Fair Pavilion.

The incessant rains of last week, deranging the street car service on Saturday and rendering the grounds about the building wet and uncomfortable, caused us to postpone the dedication of our World's Fair pavilion, one week from the day and hour fixed. Bro. Z. T. Sweeney was present, according to agreement, but returned home on Saturday on learning of the postponement. He will be with us next Saturday, when everything, we hope, will be in readiness for the dedication. A leakage in the roof rendered the building unsuitable for use on last Saturday, but this has been remedied and if the weather should be unsuitable for outdoor services, they will be held inside the building. We urge upon our members in the city and those who may be visiting us at that time, and all who are within easy reach of the city, to attend the dedication on next Saturday, June 11, at 3 o'clock p. m. It will not make a very favorable impression if only a corporal's guard is present on the occasion. Meantime we hope that all who have not yet paid their pledges to this enterprise, will do so, if possible, by that date. There should be further contributions, however, over and above those pledged in order to enable us to dedicate the building free of debt and to assist in its maintenance and in free tract distribution. We are glad to acknowledge the following sums received since last report:

C. A. Young, Christian Century,
Chicago, Ill.....	$25.00
Englewood Church, Chicago.....	15.00
C. C. Chapman, Fullerton, Cal....	50.00
Irving Park Church, Chicago.....	5.50
King's Daughters and Rose St.
Church, Chicago.....	2.00
First Church, Chicago.....	10.00
Amount acknowledged last week.....	2,984.00
Total received to date.....	3,091.50

This still leaves a deficit on cost of building of $958.50 and should be provided, for, promptly, with an additional sum for carrying out the purposes of the building. Not less than $5,000 will be required for all purposes before the end of the Fair.

Thanking all who contributed to this work, we fully trust the brotherhood to furnish the additional amount needed.

In behalf of the Committee,
J. H. GARRISON, Chairman.

Seventeen Outgoing Missionaries.

A conference of outgoing missionaries with each other, the members of the board and a few friends of missions was held in Cincinnati on Wednesday and Thursday, June 1 and 2. There were present at the conference seventeen missionaries who will go into foreign fields next September under the auspices of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Eight of these are returning after furlough; nine are about to begin their missionary work.

It was a rare privilege to be present and speak to such a gathering. It was a group of strong men and women—strong in Christian faith and devotion, strong in intellectual endowment and equipment, strong in an abounding and exuberant joy in their work. The young men and women are all college graduates. They are people who would be conspicuous in any company for culture, intelligence and strength of personality. Surely we are sending our best to the foreign field.

It was a most cheerful assembly. Not a word was said about the "sacrifice" that they were making. There were no regrets. They could not have been happier about it if every one of them had been going with a princely salary as an ambassador to some splendid court. Those who were going back to fields where they had spent seven or seventeen years were as joyous as those who were going out for the first time. The joy of the occasion found its most hilarious expression when a company of twenty-five missionaries and friends sat down, on Wednesday evening, in the home of Bro. F. M. Rains, at a dinner table which stretched through the dining room and away into the parlor.

This was the first time that our board has held such a conference with outgoing missionaries. The value of it is obvious. It gives opportunity for personal acquaintance among missionaries who are going to different fields, and between the members and officers of the board and the missionaries. It enables the new missionaries to take counsel with those who have had experience.

The following missionaries who have been on furlough attended this conference: Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Bentley, of Shanghai, China; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Garrett, of Nankin, China; Miss Bertha Clawson, of Osaka, Japan; G. L. Wharton, of Jabalpur, India; and Dr. and Mrs. E. A. Layton, of Bolengi, Africa; who are now going to China. The newly appointed missionaries who were present were: C. S. Settlemeyer, Miss Nancy Cockrell, D. E. Dannenberg, Miss Meacham, and Justin E. Brown, who go to China; R. D. McCoy, W. H. Erskine and Miss Virginia Stewart, who go to Japan; and C. E. Benlehr, who goes to India. All of these, both old and new, will go to their fields in September of the present year.

The program for the sessions of the conference was as follows:

WEDNESDAY JUNE FIRST.

9:30 a. m. Devotional Service, "Prayer," A. M. Harvuot. Address of Welcome, Miss Mattie M. Boteler. "The Missionary Calling," C. L. Loos. Discussion led by W. P. Bentley. "The Distinctive Aim of the Missionary," F. M. Rains. Discussion led by Frank Garrett.

2:00 p. m. Devotional Service, "Faith," J. N. Green. "The Intellectual Life of the Missionary," W. E. Garrison. Discussion led by S. M. Cooper. "The Spiritual Life of the Missionary," I. J. Spencer. Discussion led by P. Y. Pendleton.

THURSDAY, JUNE SECOND.

9:30 a. m. Devotional Service, "Love," D. E. Dannenberg. "The Missionaries in their Relation to Each Other and to the Society," A. McLean. Discussion led by Miss Bertha Clawson. "Lessons of Seventeen Years as a Missionary," G. L. Wharton. Discussion led by Mrs. E. A. Layton.

2:00 p. m. Devotional Service, "The Life Hid with Christ in God," C. S. Settlemeyer. "The Missionary's Care of Himself," Dr. P. T. Kilgour. Discussion led by Dr. E. A. Layton. "The Assured Success of Foreign Missions," J. A. Lord. Discussion led by W. F. Smith.

8:00 p. m. Public Reception at the Central Christian Church. Short addresses by the missionaries.

Mrs. Princess C. Long.

We are glad to furnish our readers in this number a picture of our widely known and popular songstress, Mrs. Princess C. Long, late of California, but whose address is at present Paris, Ky. Our readers will remember the recent letter of commendation in our columns from Bro. J. W. McGarvey of Sister Long and her singing. She was reared in the Methodist Church and remained there until fifteen years ago. She was educated in music for the operatic stage and sang there until she found "a more excellent way" to use the voice which God had given her. No doubt the training she received, however, has enabled her to use her voice to the best advantage and to stand the large amount of work she has been able to do in conventions and in evangelistic services. In a personal letter to the Editor she says: "It grows more and more easy to sing. This is perhaps due to the fact that I am now working for the right Master. My ambition is not to be known simply as a singer, even by our own brethren, but as a worker and an inspirer of young singers whose life is still before them, and who have not the responsibilities, loves and anxieties of a home and family, that they may see the glory of this work and its superiority over an operatic career." She cherishes the hope that later she may be able to do something in training younger singers for the kind of work she is doing.

There is a quality in the singing of Mrs. Long—a magnetic element, or whatever one may please to call it—that seizes the popular heart, and that makes her unusually popular. Her singing at our great national conventions has introduced her quite generally to the brotherhood, and she is in great demand at conventions and in evangelistic meetings. We anticipate the pleasure of hearing her on the platform of our great music hall in St. Louis during our national conventions next October. We have the promise of something from her pen, later, on the subject of religious music and singers.

Washington Christian College.

The commencement exercises of Washington Christian College were held at the Vermont Ave. Christian Church on June 1. Rev. B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore, made a brief speech to the graduates that was well received.

Dr. Daniel E. Motley, president of the college, presented the diplomas and delivered an address on education. He said Christian colleges need to be fuller and stronger in their work, launching out for all that truth is.

Dr. Motley defined his idea of a college:

"I should like to see one educational institution in America thorough and strong in its educational work, and standing solidly on the principle of Christianity. An institution not ecclesiastical, not religious, not denominational, not orthodox, not unorthodox, but exactly Christian as Christ was Christian. Christian, added to by nothing, subtracted from nothing, multiplied by nothing, divided by nothing.

"And I should like to see this institution stand in manner and in claim not arrogantly, neither apologetically, not sanctimoniously, neither tamely, not historically, not theoretically, but simply Christianly—that is all. Christian education, in its very nature, without any discussion about it, contains something that Roman or Grecian or English education does not necessarily contain, and that is life.

"Did you know that a person cannot possibly be Christian educated without having it in his life? Hear me, intellect cannot hold life, only life can hold life. What we need is Christian education."

Commencement Exercises Texas Christian University.

A great day has just closed at T. C. U. 18 ladies and gentlemen received the degree A.B., and two received the degree A.M. Of this number seven are preparing for ministerial and missionary work. The special departments were also well represented by graduates, so that in all 83 diplomas were presented at this commencement.

The class address was delivered by Judge A. E. Wilkinson, of Austin. It was a model for clearness of thought, and was intensely practical. The address takes rank with the best of its kind.

Pres. Zollars, in his usual happy vein, presented the diplomas and conferred the degrees. Addison and Randolph Clark each gave a word of greeting to the great audience, and amid the profusion of flowers, gold medals, and congratulations, T. C. U.'s best commencement day passed into history.

The institution gained this year 42 per cent in attendance over last year, making the enrollment 428. The students represented 10 states and three nations. Great things are expected next year. The faculty has been enlarged by the addition of five or six teachers, and efforts are being made to provide additional boarding facilities. The star of Texas Christian University is growing brighter every year, and Pres. Zollars and his co-laborers are happy.

News From Many Fields

Georgia.

The cause in Georgia is showing unmistakable evidences of progress. We now have two very efficient evangelists in the field. W. J. Cocke, the regular state evangelist, has endeared himself to all whom he has met. He has conducted successful meetings at Tallapoosa, Fitzgerald, Tonnelle and the First Church, Atlanta. William B. Shaw, our gifted Sunday-school and Endeavor evangelist, is winning the confidence and support of the people wherever he goes. He spoke to large and appreciative audiences in Rome last Sunday, and delivered his fine stereopticon lecture "Scenes in the Life of Christ" on Tuesday evening to a large audience. Standing room was at a premium while many were turned away.

Howard T. Cree, new pastor of First Church, Augusta, is making remarkable strides forward in the work at that place. The church is manifesting new life along all lines.

J. H. Hughes, of California, has accepted work with the splendid First Church at Macon and has entered with enthusiasm upon what promises to be a prosperous pastorate.

S. B. Moore, pastor of First church Atlanta, is directing the work successfully with a master's hand. The church in addition to $2,720 paid on new church lot, raised $554 for state work. All are jubilant over the contemplated Tabernacle soon to be erected.

Our veteran R. Lin Cave, pastor West End Church, recently closed a very successful revival. He was ably assisted by his son Robert L. Cave of Clarksville, Tenn.

J. E. Spiegel, minister at Sandersville, raised $200 for home missions. O. P. Spiegel, general southern evangelist for the American Board, will hold him a meeting this summer.

Under the ministry of A. R. Miller, the work moves on nicely at Savannah. Our work in Rome is in better condition than it has been in some time. The administration of Bro. Lavender, our mayor, is eliciting the highest praises of all. He and council have pushed the questionable dives of varied promiscuity beyond the city limits.

Sam Jones and Geo. Stewart open up a tent meeting on our popular street, 2nd Ave., on the 5th Sunday. As the tent is only one lot removed from our church we will give way at nights.

Texas.

The San Marcos River camp meeting will be held at Fentress in Caldwell County, beginning Friday, June 24, and continuing seventeen days. The location of the camp ground is about equal distance from San Marcos, Lockland and Luling and immediately on the San Marcos River—one of the most beautiful streams in America—shaded by beautiful oak trees and surrounded with Bermuda grass, lighted by electricity and furnished with water works.

The committee on arrangements has provided every convenience for the comfort of the great number of people who will attend. The bread and beef will be cooked on the grounds. Restaurants will furnish meals for those who do not care to do their own cooking; tents will be on the ground to rent; three dairies will furnish the milk and butter; bathing booths will be placed in the river, and in fact everything for convenience and comfort that can be found in a city. The large tent will be lighted by electricity and seated with as comfortable seats as can be found in any of our best churches. The preaching will be done by B. B. Saunders, and R. R. Hamlin, and the singing will be led by Prof. E. M. Douthit, assisted by a strong chorus of five hundred voices.

The church at Beaumont, where Evangelist Scoville recently held a fine meeting, is planning to build a church commensurate with the demands of the city and the numerical strength of the church.

B. J. Waugh is in a fine meeting at Port Arthur with 67 additions the last heard from. He writes that the church there wants a pastor. Who will go? Write to B. J. Waugh, Longview, Texas.

R. H. Simmons has just closed a fine meeting with the church at Plainview in which there were about 50 additions. D. C. Brown, from the Methodist church, recently baptized by Dr. J. W. Lowber of Austin, has accepted the pastorate with the church at Jennings, La. Colby D. Hall begins pastoral work with the church at Hillsboro June 1, and Edwin D. Hammer with the church at Kaufman the same date.

The church at El Campo, which the writer organized in February last, is building a church house which will be completed about July 1st.

Kentucky.

The baccalaureate sermons of Campbell-Hagerman and Hamilton Colleges were delivered Sunday, May 29, in Lexington. The former was preached by Prof. B. J. Pinkerton in the Central church, and the latter by H. D. C. MacLachlan in the Broadway church. These institutions are both in a prosperous condition and have just closed a very successful year's work.

H. C. Garrison, of Danville, is assisting his brother, C. L. Garrison, in a meeting with the church at Newport. R. H. Crossfield of Owensboro, has been assisting W. T. Wells in a splendid meeting at Bowling Green. At last reports there had been 31 added. Z. T. Williams, of Montpelier, recently assisted R. A. Staley in a meeting at Burkesville, which resulted in 8 additions, 3 by primary obedience. R. B. Neal, of Eastern Kentucky, is in a splendid meeting at Fullerton, with fifteen added at last reports, and a church organization in prospect. W. C. Gibbs, of Ludlow, recently assisted H. C. Runyan in a short meeting at Latonia, which resulted in 4 additions, 3 by confession and baptism. The meeting recently held by J. H. Stambaugh at Valley View, Madison Co., closed with 32 added, 26 by confession and baptism. E. L. Powell of Louisville, has just closed a good meeting at Union City, Ind. J. L. Hill is the regular minister at this place. Milo Atkinson has been supplying the pulpit of Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, in his absence on his European trip.

The twelfth district convention will be held at Maysville, June 29, 30. H. W. Elliott, R. M. Hopkins, R. M. Giddens, J. A. Lord, ex-Congressman Pugh and W. G. Dearing are among the speakers who will take part on the program. These district meetings are very helpful and are resulting in much good.

W. T. Brooks, of Ladoga, Ind., with J. Lawrence Sapp as singing evangelist, has just closed a very successful meeting at London, with 40 added. W. J. Loss is the regular minister of the church. Two more additions at our regular services here since our last report, both by confession and baptism. The commencement exercises of the Kentucky Female Orphan School of this city were held on the 24th of May. There were sixteen graduates. This institution has just closed a very successful session.

Strengthening the Cause in the Northwest.

We believe that Billings, Mont., is a strategic point in which to plant the Primitive Gospel. We believe that it is destined to become one of the important cities of the West. It is generally conceded that three conditions are required to assure the permanent growth of a city, namely, tributary resources, transportation facilities and energetic citizens. Add to these a favorable climate and there remains no question as to the success of that locality.

Billings is situated in the center of an immense valley surrounded by rugged hills that protect from the fierce storms of other localities and yet are open to the warm Chinook winds from the west. Last winter while our neighbors in the eastern and central states were in the grasp of storm or flood, we were usually enjoying bright, sunny days.

No resource will compare with an agricultural country in assuring permanency to a city. Farms are not shut down by hard times and cannot be closed by strikes and lock-outs. And in a country where the farms are irrigated, harvest is practically as sure as seed time. To the west of Billings are some 75,000 acres under irrigation. For these ranches practically all the supplies come from the wholesale and retail stores in this city. The Billings Land and Irrigation Co. is engaged in constructing a fine canal to water some 30,000 acres of bench land beginning within one and one-half miles east of the city limits. This proposition is declared by a host of eastern land men to be the finest they know of and the terms and inducements are such that its early settlement is unquestioned. This increased cultivated area will bring many hundred families.

On the 27th of April of this year, President Roosevelt signed the bill which provides for the opening for settlement of 1,100,000 acres of the Crow Reservation. This immense tract is just across the Yellowstone river from Billings and embraces 125,000 acres of land that can be irrigated from the unfailing Yellowstone. Big Horn and other rivers. Government engineers are now in the field inspecting the various irrigation projects offered there. For some time past, the federal government, has had irrigation experts working in the Lake Basin country, which under irrigation would add half a million acres to the resources tributary to Billings. Besides all this, there stretches in nearly every direction and in almost unlimited extent, grazing land, much of which will doubtless grow grain. From this immense range, come countless cattle and sheep till Billings has become the greatest wool shipping point in the world.

Billings is a division point on the main line of the Northern Pacific. Here the great Burlington system has its western terminus. Thus equipped, we are prepared to compete in the markets of the east, the west and the south.

That her citizens are enterprising, scarcely needs stating. The sons of the west have their greatest heritage in their vigorous health, their indomitable energy and tenacity of purpose.

In view of these facts, we believe it is highly important that our cause be firmly established here and to that end we propose exerting our best efforts. We believe that the work here is of such importance that it will justify and require the securing of an able man as minister. In the last month and a half we have purchased an organ and four dozen hymnals and paid $120.00 for preaching services, including a two weeks' meeting. This has been done without aid from any but members. While we shall require help from the board as soon as we secure a permanent pastor, it is the purpose of the church to be entirely self-supporting in a very short time. A very efficient ladies' aid society has been of much assistance in social work and in contributing to the church funds. They have announced it as their policy to refrain from "Pay Socials" and fake schemes but to give full value at all times.

W. W. CLARKE.

The New Church Extension Map.

Early in June the Board of Church Extension is mailing a beautiful large map in colors, to all the preachers in our brotherhood whose addresses they have. If any minister among us does not receive the map it will be because the board has not your address. We try to keep a complete mailing list. But in the best regulated office some addresses will be lost en route. If you do not receive the map by the last of June send a postal card to G. W. Muckley, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and the map will be promptly mailed to you. Several thousand of these maps will be at the Disciples' building at the World's Fair.

The map is the best and most attractive exhibit of Church Extension ever sent out by this board, and will be highly useful in educating the people on our Church Extension work. It contains brief statements in explanation of the work and its progress. People can catch the field at a glance. When once seen it is an object of attraction and where it has been put in churches, as an experiment, groups of interested and inquiring people gather round it and their attention is riveted at once and they do not leave it without understanding it. It is plain and self-revealing.

The map is prepared and sent out at some cost to the Board. It costs the brotherhood contributing to this fund, not a cent. It is paid for out of the interest paid by the mission churches borrowing the money. It is sacred money and the maps are sent out to increase interest in the Church Extension Fund which has done so much to house our homeless brethren. The preachers will therefore count it as doing a favor to Christ and His homeless brethren when they place the map in a prominent place.

If you are preaching for two or more churches, send for as many as you need. One should be hung in each church for which you preach. It is intended to prepare the hearts of the people for the September offering for Church Extension. It should hang before them as an object lesson of the possibilities of this work and its great needs. 360 homeless missions applied for aid last year and your Board of Church Extension could answer but 86. We need to arouse a great and abiding interest in this work. This is the object of the map. Will you surely help your board?

The board paid seventy dollars for seven thousand cards, one for each preacher, or correspondent, where a church has no pastor. Don't throw away the card. Use it to order literature. The order should come to our office soon so that our printing can be done at once and in one or two big orders. Your literature will be mailed early in August free of charge, with the understanding that it will be used to get as good a Church Extension offering as possible or distributed for educational purposes.

The South Kentucky Convention.

The South Kentucky Association met at Corydon, May 23-26. Preceded by the most successful meeting of the District C. W. B. M. in years the small attendance was disappointing. In contrast the addresses were exceptionally good. Remarkable were the addresses of R. H. Crossfield and Harvey B. Smith, of Princeton, Ky. Mr. Smith has recently entered this section of Kentucky but has already entrenched himself in our affections. The handling of his theme, "Enlarged Vision" was strong and forcible. A. McLean, G. W. Muckley and H. G. Hill were with us. Leonard Dougherty led the singing.

The outlook for the South Kentucky work is hopeful. The treasurer's report shows a reduction of indebtedness. The old executive committee was re-elected, J. W. Gant, who has so long and self-sacrificingly stood by the work under unfavorable conditions declined any further official connection with it but was induced to serve for a while longer, until an evangelist can be secured. With a new evangelist in the field the work is expected to recover its old-time vigor. J. W. Ligon was host and a fine one. R. H. Crossfield, Owensboro, was elected president. Geo. C. Long, Hopkinsville, treasurer, and Harvey B. Smith, Princeton, recording secretary.

ROGER L. CLARK.

Maritime News.

Howard Murray, who supplied for five weeks at Coburg St., St. John, reports one addition at Silver Falls, a little mission about three miles from the city.

J. F. Floyd has made a good impression. The brethren of Coburg St. are hopeful, and we feel confident that if they stand by Brother Floyd he will lead them to victory. Bro. F. D. Zimmerman, of Melton, N. D., reports $44.50 collected for foreign missions. Special meetings conducted by himself resulted in 10 baptisms and 2 otherwise. Bro. Zimmerman has begun the work in his new pastorate well.

R. W. Stevenson has resigned at Charlton, but the brethren there are not going to permit him to leave. Bro. Stevenson is one of our ripest men in pulpit ability and in experience.

Bro. E. C. Ford, editor of The Christian, is hard at work at Westport and Severton. He reports good meetings at these places. He recently visited Digby encouraging Bro. Devoe in his noble enterprise at that place. He also visited Port Williams, N. S., where his son-in-law, R. E. Stevens, is laboring. He writes that Bro. Stevens and family are about to leave the provinces. If this be true we will lose an efficient Christian worker.

The church at Back Bay raised $27 for foreign missions.

Dr. Allison, principal of the Mt. Allison Methodist College, Sackville, N. B., in a recent sermon discussed at length the proposed union of the Methodist, Congregational and Presbyterian churches.

In his opinion there is nothing to hinder an organic union.

The Presbyterian General Assembly of Canada meets in St. John, N. B., in June. The program provides for a lengthy discussion of the question of union.

Committees representing the Baptists and Free Baptists of the Maritime provinces met in the Baptist mission rooms, St. John, a few weeks ago to discuss a proposed union of their respective bodies. This union is all but consummated.

We hail with delight the prognostications of a brighter future in the religious world. I wonder if the Disciples of Christ, big D or little d, will be found among the ranks falling into line when the final signal comes. I am afraid that some of us will be lingering behind, discussing the orthodoxy of the men in the fire zone and denying them their right to such a position on the ground that their views of the atonement, the value of miracles, the resurrection, and future punishment are not in accord with ours.

The Jerusalem Pilgrims.

While in the great seven-hilled city on the Tiber, a few words concerning the cruise of the pilgrims to the "World's Fourth Sunday-school Convention in Jerusalem" might be of interest to the many readers of the Christian-Evangelist. Our ship the Grosser Kurfurst, of the North German Lloyd Atlantic service, left the piers at the foot of Hoboken Street, New York, March 8, 1904, at 5 p. m. She is a splendid vessel with tonnage of 13,182, length 582 feet, width 63 feet, draft 36 feet, and a crew of 380. She is a beautiful vessel, neat and clean a veritable floating palace, manned by the good Captain Reinkasten, who is a kind, elegant gentleman, ever interested in the people of his vessel, and his well trained crew. Our destination was Jerusalem, the city of the great King. Our route was via Madeira, Gibraltar, Algiers, Malta, Athens, Constantinople, Smyrna, Ephesus, Beirut, Caifa on the coast of Syria, where a party of some two hundred and thirty of us landed and went the overland way on horseback, passing Nazareth, Galilee, Nablus, which is old Shechem, Samaria, Bethel and on to Jerusalem. While here we also visited by carriage Hebron, Bethlehem, Jericho, Jordan and the Dead Sea. Our delegation at New York numbered some 815, with a few picked up on the way.

On board the vessel during the voyage the fellowship was most delightful and helpful. Many prominent Sunday school workers were on board from many states and territories and from Canada. Dr. John Potts, chairman of the International Lesson Committee, was among the number. His broad spirit, humble piety, and simple, childlike disposition quickly won all hearts. He preached to us at the morning service on the first Lord's day out a very simple, impressive and helpful sermon. "Whither Bound" was the theme, based on a passage in the one hundred and seventh Psalm, and Paul's voyage to Rome. The occasion, the circumstances, the theme, the speaker, all combined to make the service memorable. As Dr. Potts closed with, "Sunset and evening star,

And one clear call for me;
And may there be no moaning of the bar,

When I put out to sea." there were few dry eyes in the room. Rev. H. H. Jessup, D. D., missionary at Beirut, Syria, under the Presbyterian Board, for the last forty-five years, was among our number. Though past three score years and ten he is full of life and missionary zeal. He is a heroic character of marvelous faith and hope. He fills—most admirably—the writer's ideal of David Livingstone. Tall, slender, straight as an arrow, long, white, thin hair and beard, high forehead, quick in movement and walk, vigorous in style, and with a deep-toned voice that suggests the depths of the character of the man and causes the multitudes to listen. He was in constant demand, and made all the addresses his strength would permit during the entire voyage over.

Miss Jessie Ackerman, for some years a temperance worker of international fame, added by her excellent addresses and talks to the pleasure and profit of the voyage. She has made some six or seven tours around the world, and is now on her seventy-ninth voyage.

The Central Committee, W. H. Warren, Three Oaks, Mich., W. N. Hartshorn, Boston, and A. N. McCrillis, were all present and were unsparing in time and means to make the voyage pleasant and profitable. These are men of beautiful spirit and deserve high praise. To these Sunday-school workers, more than to any others, or all others, is the success of the enterprise to be attributed. Many other prominent workers and ministers were present, too numerous to mention in a short letter.

The name of Prof. F. H. Jacobs, New York, should be mentioned with those above. His excellent solos, together with his leadership of the music on the vessel and in the convention, contributed much to the spiritual uplift enjoyed by the delegates.

The convention, though held in a place where rare opportunities for study and sight-seeing would detract from it, was well attended throughout and was deeply spiritual, interesting and instructive. The writer was present at all save one session of the convention. The addresses were of a high order, thoughtful, spiritual, hopeful and helpful. We recall especially those of the venerable Archbishop of London, Rev. William Sinclair, who preached the convention sermon Sunday at 10:30 a. m., Dr. Monroe Gibson, Rev. W. L. Watson, and Rev. Dr. Richard Glover. These were also of London. Of our own delegation the addresses of Marion Lawrence, Toledo, O., Mrs. Mary Foster Brynes, and Mr. W. B. Jacobs, Chicago, impressed me as most suitable for the time and place.

The Lord's day evening service was a characteristic one, and will doubtless live in the minds of all as one of the delightful sessions. F. F. Belsey, Esq., London, presided. The addresses of welcome were delivered by the Right Rev. G. F. Blythe, D. D., Bishop of the Church of England in Jerusalem and the East, Hon. Selah Merritt, American Consul, Jerusalem. John Dickson, Esq., His British Majesty's Consul, was prevented from being present, but sent a letter of welcome. Responses were as follows:

America—Rev. John Potts, D. D., Toronto.

England—Dr. Monroe Gibson, London.

Canada—Rev. William Frizzell, Toronto.

United States—Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, Boston.

India—Rev. Richard Burges, Calcutta.

Colored Work—Dr. W. G. Brooks, D. D., Chicago.

Indian Work—Rev. A. L. Riggs, Santic, Neb.

Scarcely in the history of the church since the day of Pentecost has there been such a gathering. What but the gospel of Christ could bring together such a body for such a purpose? More wonderful still, an address by the high priest of Samaria was interpreted to the convention by Rev. J. Carnegie Brown, of Jerusalem, a converted Jew. Verily has the gospel broken down every barrier, and made of all "one new man, so making peace."

That, however, which rises high over all, and will doubtless linger in the hearts of all "till He comes," is the communion service, Lord's day afternoon. Dr. John Potts presided, Dr. Gibson made a most impressive and tender address. Prof. Jacobs, with an appropriate solo, melted all to tears. Then in simple way, familiar to every Disciple, the loaf and cup were passed. Calvary, as located by Gen. Gordon, is not far distant. We are inclined to the notion that this is the real place "called Calvary." What sacred associations, what holy scenes! How the heart beats and the soul rises in a great swelling tide of emotion and gratitude as we sit under these impressive influences. May this not be another Pentecost, and may these not go out "into all the world" as if baptized with new power? It is good to linger here for a brief moment, that we may catch new visions where Christ, of the future, and of duty. The joy of this holy hour will linger in the heart like the sweet odor of some pressed flower.

"Oh, joyous the quest of the pilgrim band,
Who will cross the ocean wide
To journey amid the hallowed scenes
Where our Saviour lived and died;
To follow the paths over hill and vale
Made dear by His blessed feet,
And lovingly linger near the haunts
His presence made ever sweet."

William Woods' College Commencement.

William Woods College held its fourteenth annual commencement exercises in the College auditorium, Thursday night, May 26, when diplomas were awarded to twenty-eight young ladies' the largest class in the history of the institution. The baccalaureate sermon was preached in the Christian church, Sunday morning, May 22, by Rev. J. B. Jones, owing to the illness of Rev. J. I. Perkins, of Huntsville, who had accepted an invitation to deliver that address.

Pres. Jones took for his theme the motto of the college, "Love conquers all things." His text was from the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, and the sermon was a clear and forceful address. Rev. Madison A. Hart preached the sermon to the undergraduates in the Christian Church, Sunday night, taking for his theme "The Higher Ministry of Education." Mr. Hart delivered a strong, thought-provoking sermon.

On Monday night the graduates in the music departments gave a splendid recital consisting of instrumental numbers by the four graduates in piano music, of vocal selections and of readings by graduates in expression.

A dramatization of "Tennyson's Princess" was given at the college Tuesday night by students in expression, under the direction of Miss Ellen M. Barker, head of the expression department. The play was far above the usual amateur production and reflected much credit upon Miss Barker and those who took part. The meeting of the alumnae organization was held at the college Wednesday morning. A large body of old students was present and the meeting was a very happy and pleasant one. The commencement basket ball game was also played Wednesday morning on the college campus and was witnessed by a large and interested crowd of spectators.

The art exhibit was held Wednesday afternoon in the art rooms of the college. The display consisted of work in water colors, oil and pastel paintings, china decoration, pyrography and specimens of basketry.

The junior essay contest in which six young ladies took part was held Wednesday evening. The essays were all well prepared and very creditably read. The prize, a gold medal, was awarded to Miss Clelia Boggess, of Excelsior Springs, Mo. Miss Alma Simcoe, of Fulton, was awarded second honors.

The alumnae banquet was given immediately after the junior essay contest in the college dining hall. The banquet was attended by the alumnae, the faculty, the class of 1904, representatives of the board, and a few invited guests.

Among the most interesting exercises of commencement were the class day exercises which were held Thursday morning. The welcome address was delivered by Miss Estelle Gibson, of Ellsberry, Mo., and the class will was read by Miss Lydia Kallmeyer, of New Florence, Mo., Pres. of the senior class. "Sunbonnets," a farce comedy in two acts, was presented by eleven seniors and the parts were all well done. The planting of the ivy was done by Miss Mary Goff, of Oklahoma City, Okla., amid impressive services.

The commencement exercises proper were held at the college Thursday night. Miss Blanche Farmer, of Fulton, was the salutatorian and Miss May Jameson, of Fulton, valedictorian. Besides these young ladies four other seniors read splendid essays. In a happy speech, A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, delivered diplomas to twenty-eight young ladies, sixteen in the literary department, four in piano, one in voice, two in expression and six in shorthand and typewriting. The enrollment of this year is one of the best and the institution is in a prosperous and flourishing condition. Our hearts were made glad by the announcement at the closing exercises that the board of managers had ordered the erection of a new building to cost not less than ten thousand dollars. The new building will be located south of the main college building. It will be three stories high and besides rooms for manual training, it will furnish additional living rooms. It is through the gift of our beloved Dr. W. S. Woods of Kansas City, that we are able to have this splendid new building. Work will begin at once and it is expected that the building will be ready for occupancy by September.

The President of Camden Point Orphan School sent greetings to President Jones, to which he responded and wished Camden Point abundant success and a prosperous future.

Nebraska's Secretary's Letter.

J. W. Snapp reports one added at Brownville, A. M. P. preacher. The Putman-Egbert meeting at Aurora is developing a large audience. They go from these to Lexington, June 15. Bro. Putman will move to York and that will be his headquarters as soon as his goods arrive.

C. F. Swander closes his work at North Platte, July 1. He will hold a meeting in Oregon a little later. M. D. Baumer is at Waterloo trying to gather together the fragments of the church that remains.

District conventions will be held this month as follows: No. 6 at David City, June 13-15. No. 5, at Chester, June 15-17. No. 4, at Wakefield, June 15-17. No. 8, at North Platte, June 22-24.

Geo. Rader has resigned at Eddyville and will take work elsewhere. De Forest Austin supplied at Geneva on May 29. It was planned to organize a C. E. Society. No report from it to this writing.

The Executive Committee of the state Board, to which was referred the matter of building a tabernacle at the convention grounds, decided to postpone that action till another year. The grounds will be well fenced and comfortable seats provided. The tent will be paraffined to make it waterproof, and the meeting will be held therein again this year.

Bro. Charles Gobbey of Beatrice, who has been at Columbus, Ind., for more than a year, is at home for a vacation. Bro. Cobbey has been quite successful in preaching for a mission church in Columbus.

The Christian Citizens Council of Bethany, has been discussing the advisability of making a lake at the convention grounds.

Bro. H. C. Holmes will have charge of the book stand at the convention this year, and he is anxious that the list of books on sale shall include such as the brethren in the state are interested in. If any have suggestions to make, he will be glad to receive them. Write him at Fairbury before June 30. There will be as liberal a discount given as the conditions will warrant, and as large a line to select from as seems desirable. Come prepared to look over and select from this stock. Your will save money.

Remember that our state convention is now only two months ahead. August 2-7 is the date. Rates of R. R. fare can not now be given, but will be as soon as they can be obtained. Full information will be published in good time as to all matters pertaining to the convention and how to get there. The program will be satisfactory as it now seems to be arranged.

Letters have been mailed to the churches that have thus far not sent in anything on apportionments. If there is a reasonable response to these appeals, as well as those to individual pledgers, we can go over the line June 30 without debt. Will you do this? Nothing unreasonable has been asked, and nothing that is out of harmony with the giving of the churches that have remitted. It is not a question of poverty with many of these delinquent churches. The crops have been abundant, and the prosperity steady for several years. It is a question of desire. Remember that June 30 fixes our closing date for the present fiscal year.

The cards for statistics have been sent. May we not have a prompt and full response? It costs nothing but a little labor, and it is very valuable.

District Convention.

The Sixth District of Illinois Missions will hold their Annual Convention at Mattoon, June 21-22, 1904. An excellent program has been arranged in four divisions, viz., C. W. B.M., State and District interests and our Plea. All the subjects are of great interest to the church. We need the presence of every preacher and a representative from every church. Your presence and advice are much needed at this convention. The pastor and church at Mattoon extend a cordial invitation.

Carrollton and Carrollton Church.

Carrollton is a city of about 5,000 inhabitants, the county seat of Carroll Co., one of the best in the state. Carrollton is on the main line of the Wabash R. R., St. Louis to Kansas City, and on the main line of the Santa Fe, Kansas City to Chicago, and it is the terminus of a branch road of the Burlington System. Carrollton has proven to be one of the best convention points for our people in the state.

In Carroll County there are all told twenty-two Churches of Christ. Of this number fourteen are co-operative churches. The county is organized, has a county evangelist and holds quarterly co-operative meetings and a monthly paper, with a circulation of six hundred copies, is published at Carrollton, devoted to the interest of the churches in the county.

The church at Carrollton has a membership of 610 and the present minister has been there four years. It has a strong board of officers of twelve of the representative men of the community,

E. H. Kellar.

The senior elder, Dr. Littleton Tull, has been an officer in the congregation since 1851.

The congregation was set in order in the grand jury room of the first court house in Carrollton, by evangelist, and later pastor, Thomas N. Gaines in December, 1845, with 25 members. The congregation worshipped in the court house till 1848, when uniting with the Methodists and Baptists a meeting house was built on the west side of the square, known as the Baptist church. Those who had chosen to be known simply as Christian had the use of this house one-fourth time, which arrangement continued till a Christian church was built in 1858. This first house was completely destroyed by a wind storm in May, 1861. A second house was built on the foundation of the first house, in 1867; this house is in good preservation at this writing and is called "Music Hall" and was used by the congregation until the third house, the present one, was ready in 1892.

The town and the church is now engaged in making preparations to entertain properly all who come to the conventions represented. Lodging and breakfast are furnished free and dinner and supper can be had at a cost not to exceed 25 cents each meal.

The committee on arrangements will be greatly helped by those who are expecting to attend, if they will send their names in advance to the pastor E. H. Kellar, Carrollton, Mo. The electric car meets all passenger trains and brings delegates within one block of the church building where all are asked to report. This later information is given in event the reception committee and the incoming delegate fail to make connection.

Some preachers who have served the Carrollton Church are: Thomas N. Gaines, Thomas P. Haley, Henry S. Earl, Benj. H. Smith, Wm. H. Robinson, E. R. Childers, D. M. Grandfield, W. A. Meloan, E. B. Cake, R. M. Mesick, R. H. Ellett, A. P. Terrell, C. H. Trout, E. W. Thornton, J. T. Ogle.

The board of officers of the church is as follows: Elders—Dr. Littleton Tull, Ralph F. Lozier. Deacons—(emeritus) J. W. Clinkscale, Waller Holladay. (Active) Joseph Hill, Robt. G. Martin, James E. Willis, E. J. Rea, John E. Lynn, A. F. Smith, Dr. R. O. Harris, John G. Houston, Chas. D. Wagaman, Dr. B. S. Reily.

[State Convention—A Last Word.]

The most cheering news comes from every part of the state about those who are coming to the state convention. The C. W. B. M., the Bible-school hosts, the C. E. hustlers and the church workers are turning their eyes towards Carrollton as the objective point of their desires.

The Christian women never fail, they will be there in force. Mrs. A. G. Alderman, that woman with a brave head and mighty soul, who went with her husband to Mexico to join battle against sin and shame for the Lord and his church, and though her husband fell at the post of duty, with sublime heroism continues the struggle, is to be at Carrollton with a message that will thrill and fill your soul.

The services on the Lord's day promise to be of more than ordinary interest, the men selected to fill the pulpits are men worthy of the honor. The communion service in the afternoon should be and doubtless will be, a "season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Never were the Endeavorers as thoroughly enlisted as they are in this convention. They are appointing their delegates and working up the attendance. So of the Bible-school; they are never left in an affair of this kind. They will come as a flood.

Several letters from ministers have come saying how happy they would be to attend if only they had the means. No church ought to permit its preacher to remain away from any such cause. If it were a matter that was selfish to him, the benefit coming to him alone, the congregation might well be indifferent; but it is not, the greatest beneficiary in the matter is the congregation itself; to them, through him, quickened, freshened, inspired anew with the fellowship he can only find at the convention, comes the greater blessing, and the best money they can spend is in sending their preacher to the state convention. But even this is not all, for out of these gatherings comes that which enlarges and expands the cause of Christ in Missouri, in the home land and in the wide, wide, world. Other religious bodies count it a great thing to do this for their ministry, why not we?

One word more about railroad rates. We were in error in stating that the tickets were on sale June 16-20, it is 16-21, one day more. It may be possible some could not leave home until Tuesday, June 21. The tickets are on sale that day. Remember now, no certificate is needed, you buy at your home station a round trip ticket to Carrollton and return, for which you pay one and one-third fare. See your agent.

We believe that this convention is to be one of the great ones, and that you will be sorry if you miss it. But then you won't do this. I have a promise I want to make you. The one great dread of my life in the last few months has been that I should be compelled to report a deficit, it has haunted me waking and sleeping. I promise you this, that if your church will send its offering immediately that deficit shall be wiped out. Won't you do it?

Yours in His name,
T. A. ABBOTT.

Missouri Bible School Notes.

The Carrollton Convention is emphasized in this number of all our Missouri papers, for it is the great day of the feast with us. The Christian-Evangelist has done itself proud by the space and advertising given this annual gathering of the saints, for which those of us so closely identified feel very grateful to the editors.

The rate this year is a one and one-third fare for the round trip from all points in the state, with no certificate
 "foolishness." Buy your round trip tickets right at home on Friday, June 17, or 16, if you wish.

The date of the conventions is June 17-22. Tickets on sale, June 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and if you come later you should pay double fare, while all coming even as late as Monday must bring good reports or take the penalty.

All seeing the programs from C. W.
 B. M. to state missionary, compliment them, which is right, for they are good.

Carrollton gives us lodging and breakfast gratis, while good dinners and suppers are to be given us at twenty-five cents each.

The Wabash and Santa Fe give us direct lines to Carrollton, two of the very best railway systems in the west, while the Burlington is "tolerable like." But with these three systems we will have no difficulty reaching the convention from all portions of the state. Other lines will sell you via one of these right into Carrollton, so no excuses are valid or acceptable.

R. B. Havenner did as we thought, dedicating the house at Bland last Sunday, raising something like $500, so that the house was dedicated free of all obligations, and his meeting is going on with fine success, making three new houses and more than five hundred members gathered in by our evangelist in these new towns on the Kansas City division of the Rock Island, with all obligations met and church property worth nearly $7,500—all this at a trifling cost, and we want you brethren in the ministry and Bible school superintendents to come to our rescue with at least an offering, if not your full proportion of this expense. If no better, bring it to Carrollton.

T. J. Head reports from Rolla, "Our meeting here closes to-night with all departments of the church well organized, including officers and a splendid ladies' aid, and ten additions to Christ."
 While doing this work, our evangelist went out to Macedonia in the country and put in a new Bible-school—another good reason why you should support these worthy men. Any one not willing to support such work ought to be excluded from stinginess, in my opinion.
 First, Sedalia, this year gave us $100.
 What think you of that? J. W. Mc-Clain, J. N. Dalby, and J. M. Rudy had much to do with it, as under others, the school had gotten in debt, these waited, and then paid in full. Good for Sedalia, a faithfulness to pledges that others in Missouri could follow with credit.

J. H. Allen, so ready in all good works, has helped us do our work this year with a personal offering of $50.00, and we gladly "tell it abroad."

Bellflower is in a union house, hence are cramped into a "union" school, but the congregation is not slow to help a good cause with readiness and liberality.
 H. C. Hupe is in the lead. David Miller has just begun his work with them and the outlook is bright, for he is devoted and energetic.

That delinquent list will surprise some of you with amount and correspondents.

Cuba Convention Notes.

The annual convention of the 3rd Missionary District (Ill.) convened at Cuba, May 24 to 26, 1904. Bro. Van Arsdall, our capable president, was in the chair, but we greatly missed Bro. Bendt, our efficient secretary, who has served our district so acceptably for the past few years, and who at this time was removing to his new work, Oskaloosa, Iowa.
 The principal addresses were delivered by O. W. Lawrence, of Rock Island, State Secretary J. Fred Jones, Pres. address,
 G. B. Van Arsdall, Peoria, W. M. Jordan,
 Quincy, E. B. Richey, Blandinsville,
 A. C. Roach, Kewanee, J. G. Waggoner,
 Eureka, J. O. Walton, Bloomington, N.
 G. Brown, Galesburg. These addresses were of a high order, edifying and up-lifting.

Brother A. B. Cunningham of Flora, was with us and represented the "Benevolent Association." On Wednesday afternoon the C. W. B. M. had an enjoyable and profitable session under the leadership of Miss Anna Hale, and Miss Eva Hoge.

Let all the churches in the 3rd District take notice that brother G. W. Backner, of Macomb, is our new secretary. Our of Macomb, is our new secretary. Our report for the past year was very encouraging, in that we employed an evangelist, J. O. Walton, to hold some meetings, and also raised about $700.00 in this district. This shows a healthy and progressive sentiment throughout the district, relative to our needs, and a hearty co-operation on the part of the churches, in State and District work that has not been known for years. Let all the pastors muster their forces upon the firing line and hold them there until the San Juan of evil shall surrendered to the advancing army of Light, and the old 3rd District shall lead all the districts in winning Illinois for Christ.

One of the most interesting and profitable features of our convention was brother Marion Stevenson's five lectures on the Pentateuch. While these lectures contain the very meat of things in the five books of Moses, yet brother Stevenson brings out that fine spiritual strain that runs like a golden thread through these books, and makes his lectures so winning, uplifting and popular with the masses. These lectures should be heard by our people everywhere, and Brother Waggoner pronounce them the best he had ever heard. The great value of his work is seen in the fact that he is engaged for months in advance.

A. L. FERGUSON, Pastor.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Bentonville.—Our meeting goes well; 15 to date; all baptisms, save one; 8 yesterday.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Hot Springs, May 30.—There have been four additions up to date in our meeting. I am doing my own preaching.—T. M. KINCAID.

CANADA.

Winger, Ontario.—The church here has just closed a meeting. Bro. A. T. Campbell, of Toronto, did the preaching. As the visible results of the effort, there were twelve additions, ten by confession, one from the Methodists, and one by statement. I expect to close my work here in September and would like to see some one ready to take up the work at that time. There are two congregations in the country. Plenty of work for one who is willing to do it.—HENRY GENDERS.

COLORADO.

Fort Collins, May 30.—Four added the past two Sundays; three by baptism. All strong additions.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, May 30.—Two additions yesterday at H Street. In the afternoon the writer preached for the newly organized church in Alexandria, Va. There were three additions there—two by statement and one from the Baptists. There will be several others next Lord's day. The prospects are bright for a strong church in this old historic city. The church now has 18 members.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

ILLINOIS.

Windsor, May 30.—I was called to a funeral at Janesville May 25. I stayed over, preached three sermons and baptized four that had made the confession when I was there in March, and had seven confessions the last night. I will return and help them in a short meeting and baptize those soon. Bro. Shane, of Mason, has been called to their work. They have been without a minister. I have received about 60 into their church, but was never their minister.—A. H. HARRELL.

Pawnee, May 31.—Our meeting at Elkhart, of twelve days, resulted in 15 additions to the church. We will preach for the church one-half time. Our temporary address will be Williamsville, Ill., instead of Pawnee.—B. F. TURNER.

INDIANA.

Hammond, May 28.—One confession at Hammond last Lord's day. I have been granted three month's leave of absence during July, August and September.—C. J. SHARP, Minister.

OURRSBZ,WHIMUG,LLdaharyPastorT用信Gg和W lio,.

IOWA.

Fairfield, June 1.—Forty new Sunday-school scholars were enrolled last Sunday, and one added to the church at the evening service.—A. R. A.

Sigourney, May 31.—One added by baptism at Sigourney and one by statement—from the Baptists—at Lancaster, recently.—C. H. STRAWN.

Atlantic, May 30.—Two fine services yesterday. The 11 a. m. service was the memorial sermon for the G. A. R.'s. The evening service we had four additions; another husband and wife. This makes 11 husbands and wives to come together since our new house was dedicated, April 6.—W. B. CREWSDON.

Keokuk, June 1.—Two added Sunday forenoon, and four the previous Sunday, B. S. Denny, state secretary, spoke for us Sunday night.—J. W. KILBORE.

KANSAS.

Thayer, May 30.—Our meetings closed with 23 additions to the Thayer congregation. There were 10 baptisms, one from United Brethren, and 12 by statement and commendation. C. W. Yard is employed to preach in Thayer every Lord's day.—SIMPSON ELY.

Atchison, May 28.—Our Sunday-school is in a flourishing condition, having reached the same attendance now by a natural and healthy growth that was reached last year by a "contest," which was followed by a reaction. A notable feature is the pastor's class of boys, ranging from 11 to 14 years of age. There are 40 enrolled in the class, and 32 were present on last Lord's day. The primary department, of which Mrs. Ely is superintendent, numbers about one hundred members—75 in attendance. The ladies' aid society includes nearly all the women of the church, and is a strong factor in the work of the church. They are successfully pushing the "calendar" plan for raising a small debt of $450.00 remaining on the church, and confidently expect to pay the debt by the end of the year 1904.—EDWARD L. ELY, pastor.

Salina, June 1.—Twenty-one additions—fifteen by confession and six by letter, during April and May, at the regular services. Nine were young men.—DAVID H. SHIELDS.

MICHIGAN.

Saginaw, April 1.—Three added Sunday, May 29.—J. S. RAUM.

MISSOURI.

Clarksville, May 26.—There were two baptisms at prayer meeting last Thursday evening.—J. D. POWELL.

Drexel, May 31.—Please report four by confession and baptism at Cleveland, May 17. Also one from the Methodists was baptized at Creighton May 30.—O. A. ISHMAEL.

Smithfield, May 30.—R. B. Havener closed a meeting at this place last Monday night with sixteen additions. We had crowded houses nearly every night. We have raised thirty dollars a month for a minister for half time. Bro. Havener left the church in splendid shape. We expect to have him hold us another meeting in the fall, and are looking forward to a great ingathering of souls.—ETTA BEAMER.

Mountain Grove, May 29.—We closed a good meeting at Willow Springs, Mo., May 22—23 sermons with 23 confessions. Bro. W. E. Gray is their pastor. The church was dead when he took the work the 1st of March. Ten had been added to the church before I went to assist him. Bro. Gray is doing splendid work. Among the additions were the city marshal and deputy county marshal, also a doctor who can speak nine different languages. Many more, I think, will soon follow under Bro. Gray's faithful work.—E. W. YOCUM.

Kansas City, June 3.—Sheffield Church getting along nicely. Church has called G. E. Jones for another year. Sunday-school doing fine since we have renewed interest in rally.—G. E. JONES, Pastor.

Weaubleau, June 2.—I held a week's meeting at Cross Timbers. Closed Sunday night. Was rained out of two of our best services. Baptized one young married man. This place needs a revival bad. Hope some one can hold them one this fall.—S. E. HENDRICKSON.

NEBRASKA.

Arapahoe.—I am preaching full time at Bartley, Red Willow county, Neb. I made a memorial discourse for the G. A. R.'s May 29.—C. P. EVANS.

OHIO.

Steubenville, May 30.—Four added yesterday. All heads of families. Two by confession and two from denominations. Our Sunday-school mission on the hill averaged 105 in attendance for the first quarter of 1904.—H. H. MONINGER.

Martin's Ferry, May 30.—One added from the Baptists since last report. I preached a special sermon Sunday afternoon to the Knights of the Golden Eagle, a uniformed order, that attended in a body.—G. F. ASSITER.

OKLAHOMA.

Kingfisher, June 1.—At prayer meeting last week a sister made the good confession and was baptized the same hour of the night. She came from the M. E.'s. The annual C. E. Convention of Oklahoma and Indian Territory was held in the Christian church. Miss Kate H. Hans, of Missouri, was with us. Her addresses were enjoyed by all.—ISOM ROBERTS.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Yankton, June 1.—I am here investigating the prospects of organizing the Christian Church. I have thus far found seven firm and anxious members. It seems to me that there is an opening here for a successful work. I will look farther into conditions. The expense will be the greatest obstacle.—A. D. WARD.

TEXAS.

Bastrop, May 28.—The writer and his good wife have just closed a meeting at Smithville, Texas, where E. J. Bradley ministers. The meeting was three weeks in length; forty-five additions in all. There were 27 baptisms and four from the Baptists and 14 by statement. A marked feature of the meeting was that 32 of the number were heads of families. The church had but 53 members when we began and the character of the 45 new members easily doubles the financial and working force of the church. We have been evangelizing a good while, but never worked with a finer character than Ernest J. Bradley, the Smithville minister. He is every inch loyal to God's word, and has no crochets or foolish notions in his make-up. We have a few days left before the meeting of the Texas convention and are putting the time in at Bastrop, the county seat of Bastrop county, trying to revive and encourage the church to the point of employing a minister. Our next meeting will be at Forney, Texas.—JOHN A. STEVENS.

Garland, May 30.—We had one addition by letter yesterday.—CHAS. CHASTEEN.

Our Campaign for Kansas.

Rally Day for the churches, June 19.

The time is at hand for every church, Bible-school, C. E. Society, C. W. B. M. and Junior C. E. in Kansas to draw up in line of battle. The bugle call of our Master has sounded. It is the part of a true soldier to listen and obey. As Napoleon said to his soldiers at the battle of Austerlitz, "Every soldier has the crown of the Emperor in his hands," so say we with respect to the future of the Master's cause in Kansas. Each Disciple in the state holds within his hands the weal or the woe of the great work committed to him. Shall we do our duty, or shall we flinch and quail before the advancing hosts of sin and leave the battle to be fought by our comrades? Whether or not we shall come to the state convention at Paola with colors flying depends upon the activity of the Kansas churches during this month. Read the ringing words from the pens of a few of our Kansas workers who are intensely interested in this great cause. And when you have read go out and lend a hand in bringing to pass the desire of so many hearts.

Brethren, this is no time for quibbling. No time for debating; no time for faultfinding. The issues are too great, the time is too short and the consequences too far-reaching to admit of delay because of individual preferences or fancies. The question is, shall we stand by the Kansas Christian Missionary Society and through it by the Kansas brotherhood? No individual because of personal preferences has any right to forsake his brethren in their time of greatest need.

Brethren of the ministry and leaders of all departments in church work, we can only appeal to you and leave the matter in your hands. The work is yours, not mine. The days of June will be filled with anxiety and freighted with prayer as we await your response to this appeal. Shall we be disappointed? Shall the Lord of the harvest wait in vain for the reapers to do their duty? I do not believe it. The Lord expects every Disciple of Christ to do his duty.

Your brother in hope,

W. S. LOWE.

Topeka, Kansas.

WILL KANSAS DO HER DUTY?

The above question is being asked at this time by every anxious worker in the state. There are many of the churches that took the offering on Kansas Day, but many more failed, and as a result have not taken it yet. These churches have no right to throw off their responsibility and thus increase the responsibility of others until it becomes a burden. If every member, and especially every preacher, would do his part the work, instead of being a burden to anyone would be counted a privilege and a pleasure.

If we do not pay our debt to Kansas it will certainly be because of a failure to understand the logic of Mt. Olivet. We are to let our light shine first at home. If the rays do not light up Kansas, how can they extend across the seas? If they fall short of the ends of the earth we will fail of our mission as disciples of Him who died for the world.

The time is short. The year will close in less than a month. If you expect to have a part in Kansas work during the year 1903-1904 now is the time to act. It is a golden opportunity which should be seized at any cost. May our "battle cry" for this year be realized and God will abundantly bless His people.

Arkansas City, Kansas.

M. LEE SOREY.

CAN WE?

Can we raise seven thousand dollars for Kansas Missions? Rather let us say, shall we raise it? If forty thousand Disciples in the state would give twenty-five cents apiece the sum would be raised and a thousand more. Our ability is not the question. It is a question of loyalty to Christ—a problem which the preachers of the state must solve. If the preachers will agitate the people will respond. If they will sound a bugle peal forward the churches will advance. If they will hold on high the motto, $7,000 for Kansas missions, the brotherhood will rally around it. Every pastor should make it his pride to raise the full apportionment.

Let us be faithful stewards of our Lord's vineyard and not be found wanting when in July the Lord shall come to receive His own. Let us go to Paola with triumphant banners and songs of rejoicing that every preacher throughout the state has led his people to victory; every church on the honor roll and every Disciple proud of it; the work in the state multiplied and multiplying and Christ honored through the watchmen on the battlements who day and night have not ceased the cry to all congregations in arrears, "Come let us be faithful; let not a congregation fail in doing their part, Christ demands it for His glory and we in honor must raise $7,000 for Kansas missions."

Brother pastor, we must lead and the people will follow. If we fail to meet the pressing demands of the year it will be because we have been recreant to our great trust and high calling. Let us magnify our opportunity and spread wide our borders.

Topeka, Kansas.

CHAS. A. FINCH.

SHOULD BE EASILY DONE.

The battle cry "$7,000 for Kansas missions, 7,000 souls for Christ" is possible of realization without even pleasurable sacrifice.

Two blocks from where I am seated lives a day laborer in a rented house with wife and children dependent upon his wages. He spends ten cents a day for chewing tobacco, the accursed of the vegetable kingdom. If the 50,000 Disciples in Kansas would pay as much to state work the $7,000 would be given in less than one and a half days, and the Kingdom of heaven would be enlarged within our borders.

Kansas with wheat and oil; Kansas with corn and dollars; Kansas with cattle and grass; Kansas with Bible-schools and Endeavors; Kansas with C. W. B. M.'s and prayer meetings; Kansas with congregations and church houses; Kansas with sacred song and divine plea, ought to evangelize Kansas in this generation. $7,000 for Kansas missions and 7,000 souls for Christ is only a part of what the Lord requires of us this year.

GEORGE E. LYONS.

Lyons, Kansas.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

I learn that only a few of the churches have paid their apportionments for state missions, and I want to send them this question, "why?" Why should they increase your burdens by delay?

Preachers, elders, deacons, attend to this; you have the same reasons to pay your apportionments promptly as the members of your congregations have to pay theirs. And if you neglect why complain when they neglect?

Yates Center, Kansas.

J. G. SLICK.

THE PREACHER'S RESPONSIBILITY.

The man who has the ears of the people in the churches is the minister. He of all men knows best their means, their interest and the way to approach them.

As the end of the missionary year draws near and only about one-third of the $7,000 is raised the leaders of the state missionary work turn to the minister. Upon him who has the opportunity to bring their duty home to the people the burden rests. He is actually worth a hundred men and women. He is their teacher, their adviser. He may stir their hearts into a sympathy that will mean large gifts; or he may keep silent and allow them to slumber. What will Christ's minister do about this pressing need? What Christ would he would do. The missionary preacher will speak the word to the people and do it soon.

WALLACE C. PAYNE.

Lawrence, Kansas.

HOW TO DO IT.

Brother Lowe wants me to tell him how the thing is done—that is, how the apportionment for state missions is raised. We did it this way: Early in the year the state work was presented at the elders' and deacons' meeting, and they were urged to accept the apportionment and set a time for paying it. They did both. Their action was placed before the church in the form of a recommendation, and the doings and needs of the state board were presented to the congregation. By vote they adopted the recommendation. When the time came to pay, we paid. I have followed this plan since the second year of my ministry. We have not always been in time to get the church's name on the honor roll at the state convention, but I believe we have never failed to raise the apportionment. The secret seems to be this: That when the church is made acquainted with the doings of the state board and its needs and possibilities, the membership insists on having a small part at least in the good work. It isn't my "fault"; the churches I have served simply believe in state missions, and the rest is easy. Definite information has accomplished more in my fields than desperate exhortation. I think in case I had not made "previous arrangements" that before the missionary year was up I would skip out and raise the apportionment by personal solicitation.

Respectfully,

A. L. DRUMMOND.

BARNETT.

Sister Emmeline Barnett was born in Bedford Co., Tenn., May 27, 1824, and died at her home near Shaw's Point Christian church in Macoupin Co., Ill., April 2, 1904, in her 80th year. In 1846 she was married to Thos. Barnett, who lived only three years. She united with the Christian Church early in life, and remained loyal to her faith to the end. Sister Barnett was good to the poor, kind to the sick, and died respected and honored by all who knew her. The writer conducted her funeral at the Shaw's Point Church on Monday, April 4, before a very large concourse of people. W. H. KERN.

CLIFFORD.

Marguerite, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Clifford, died at the family residence, 5474 Greenwood Avenue, Chicago, May 13. She was born February 18, 1885, at Indianapolis, Indiana. The family removed to Tacoma, Washington, when she was three and to Chicago when she was nine years of age. She united with the Hyde Park Church in September, 1900, under Dr. H. L. Willett. She has suffered from tuberculosis of the skin for four and a half years but was rarely confined to her bed or room. During the last five weeks, in spite of all that medical skill and her devoted parents could do, the disease became worse, causing the most intense suffering. She bore up with marvelous fortitude and cheerfulness. Her endurance was extraordinary. She won all hearts by her heroism and tenderness. The service was conducted at the home Sunday morning, May 15, by her pastor, E. S. Ames.

GREEN.

Helen E., the beloved wife of Frank M. Green, of Kent, O., passed away on her 67th birthday, May 19, 1904, and was followed to her grave by a large concourse of sympathizing friends to-day. She was the daughter of Albert and Almira Stowe, pioneers in the settlement of Summit Co., and pioneers in the early work of the Disciples. Mrs. Green is survived by four children, and eight grandchildren. In the three-fold relation of daughter, wife, and mother, she was ever devoted and faithful and as the wife of a minister, she was Bro. Green's esteemed help-mate.

Bro. J. G. Slayter, pastor of the First Church of Akron, in his funeral address, called special attention to the little recognized, but valuable services and sacrifice of the minister's wife, of whom Mrs. Green was a conspicuous example. Bro. Green has the hearty sympathy of hosts of friends all over the United States.

R. MOFFETT.

Cleveland, O., May 21.

HOPKINS.

Miss Mary B. Hopkins fell asleep in Jesus, Friday, May 27, 1904, at her home No. 65 Webster St., Kokomo, Ind.

McDOWELL.

John H. McDowell was born in Kentucky, Nov. 22, 1821, and died at Bladensburg, Ia., May 2, 1904, aged 82 years. He was married to Mary A. Fisher in 1851, and to this union were born ten children, eight of whom are living. He united with the church of Christ at Bladensburg in 1856 and was elected a deacon in 1866 and served until his death. The sincerity and genuineness of his Christian life were beyond question. He gave most freely of his time, his thought and his money. No worthy appeal was ever made to him in vain.

The funeral services were held at the residence conducted by E. A. Hastings and assisted by Eld. J. N. Smith of Hedrick.

He will be greatly missed in the community but most of all by the devoted wife who has shared with him the trials and hardships of his pioneer life. E. A. HASTINGS.

"Keep Sweet and Keep Movin'."

Homely phrase of our Southland bright—

Keep steady step to the flam of the drum;

Touch to the left—eyes to the right—

Sing with the soul tho' the lips be dumb.

Hard to be good when the wind's in the east;

Hard to be gay when the heart is down;

When "they that trouble you are increased,"

When you look for a smile and see a frown.

But

"Keep sweet and keep movin'."

Hard to be sweet when the throng is dense,

When elbows jostle and shoulders crowd;

Easy to give and to take offense

When the touch is rough and the voice is loud.

"Keep to the right," in the city's throng;

"Divide the road" on the broad highway;

There's one way right when everything's wrong;

"Easy and fair goes far in a day."

Just

"Keep sweet and keep movin'."

The quick taunt answers the hasty word—

The lifetime chance for a "help" is missed;

The muddiest pool is a fountain stirred,

A kind hand clenched makes an angry fist.

When the nerves are tense and the mind is vexed,

The spark lies close to the magazine;

Whisper a hope to the soul perplexed—

Banish the fear with a smile serene—

Just

"Keep sweet and keep movin'."

Bert's Exploit.

What a cold, cutting blast! The snow was flying furiously, driven here and there by the fierce northwest wind. Mrs. Warner put her head out of the kitchen door, while the supper, cooking on the stove, sizzled and sputtered. When she drew back from the door, snowy crystals sparkled in her dark hair.

"Isn't it awful!" she exclaimed to Bert. The boy was leaning against the kitchen window peering out into the hoary evening, his eyes focused on the spot in the horizon where the sun should have set. No sunset to-night. In the snowy fusillade and the darkness one could not see three feet beyond the window.

"It's worse than we've had yet," said Bert. "Listen to that wind, ma. Sounds like a dozen packs of wolves." Then he began to congratulate himself on the fact that the cows were snug in the barn, and that Maggie, his mare, was contentedly munching alfalfa in her stall.

But his mother again stepped to the kitchen door and peered out into the oncoming stormy night.

"Bert!" she called, in an uneasy tone, "have you seen George Morgan drive back from town this afternoon?"

"No, mother; he didn't pass our house."

"Well, then that poor little woman is over there on the ranch all alone—not a soul but her and the baby. No cows up—the baby drinks cow's milk; no wood and—nothing. What will she do?" She stepped to the window with a picture in her mind of the forlorn young wife with her baby in her arms, helplessly waiting for the return of her husband, who was doubtless blockaded by the snowstorm.

"Where is Mag?"

"Down in the barn."

"Ethelbert, you are only twelve, but will you get on Mag and run over to Morgan's and drive up their cows and see if the poor woman's got wood? God will help you."

"Yes, mother!" the boy exclaimed, for he hadn't his brave widowed mother's heart for nothing.

In a moment the mother had his heavy coat off the nail and the sturdy lad wrapped in it. Having on his cap and mittens, he turned to go.

"I saw the cows in the north pasture this afternoon. Be careful, Bert, and keep your wits. You're mother's man, you know. Follow the fence and you won't get lost."

The snow and wind almost drove him back into the house, but he tried to chuckle to himself and ran quickly to the barn.

Shortly he called to his mother standing in the lighted kitchen doorway, as the mare galloped by: "I'm off!"

"Keep to the fence, Bert!" she called after him.

For some time the mother stood holding open the door and in this way lighted him to the long stretch of wire fence, which, if he would follow, would lead him to the Morgan ranch, two miles away. The sharp wind and floundering of the mare upon the uneven ground made keeping in his saddle a difficult matter. The blinding snowflakes pelted his face with such insistence that he was compelled to ride along with his eyes half-closed. However, he had been over the ground often in the daylight, and felt secure so long as he could keep to the fence. It chafed him to think of having to follow the long stretch of fence, when in the daytime he would cut across the great pasture and thus make the distance shorter.

But he urged the mare on with a courageous heart. And just then the mare stumbled.

"Whoa, Mag!" he shouted, and felt the little mare going down underneath him.

In a moment he was hurled out of the saddle into the snow. He was stunned. Presently he got on his feet and felt about him to see where he was. He could now appreciate what it was to be lost in one's own pasture. On such nights as these, ranchmen, according to their own statement, have driven round and round on their ranches, vainly trying to find their domiciles. He heard a whinny, and he called "Mag! Mag!" Again he went head foremost, and down an embankment. At the bottom, he recovered his senses and began to think—and rightly—that he was in the irrigation ditch, which, fortunately, was dry.

"Mag?" he called inquiringly. There was the familiar whinnying just by him in the ditch. He could see his hand before him, but barely. But as he groped about, his hand came in contact with a familiar soft coat; and it was the mare! She was standing waiting for him.

He felt for the bridle. He knew now that they had left the fence several rods to the right. So he led the mare up the embankment, and mounting, made for the fence. As he came up against the fence he saw a light shining at a distance—dimly through the snow—and he knew it was Morgan's. He stepped a few feet in front and found he was just by the irrigation lateral. The boy's courage was almost gone. Mag rubbed her nose against his head.

"Well, Mag, I guess we had better go on," said he, mounting into the saddle. It seemed like hours since he had left his mother in the kitchen door.

Having gotten his bearings, he made his way to Morgan's gate, and, luckily, the cows were standing huddled up in the corner as cattle always do in such storms.

"Whoa!" he shouted, and, rounding them up, drove directly for the light at Morgan's. Soon he reached the corral, back of the house, and drove the cows in. Hitching Mag in the corral, he made his way to the house. As he approached the kitchen he heard the baby crying within and the voice of the young mother trying to comfort it. He opened the door. The young woman gave a frightened "Oh!" Recognizing Bert, she uttered, "Thank God!" and almost fainted as she fell back in a chair.

"The baby is hungry, and I have no milk for him," she said, recovering herself. "George went to town this morning expecting to return in the afternoon, but this unexpected storm has kept him back somewhere." With that she began to cry, as well as the baby.

Bert, child as he was, didn't know what to do, and stood confused. He looked around the room and discovered a milk bucket, which he seized by the handle and ran out to the corral.

It was but a little while now until the baby was cooing and drinking at his bottle.

"Have you any wood chopped?" asked Bert, after he was warmed up by the little stove.

"That's every stick," she sighed, pointing to the woodbox. "George was going to chop some more when he should return this afternoon. If it hadn't been so awfully cold I wouldn't have used so much."

Then, with a grateful heart, she placed another lamp in the window to light Bert as he made his way to the woodpile to chop up the long cedar poles.

After he had brought in the last armful of wood, the young mother stooped and kissed him. "Bert, you are an angel," she said.

All night the blizzard lasted, and the wind howled around the Morgan home—where Bert remained as protector and comforter.

In the morning the sun rose on the landscape innocent and beautiful, the azure of the sky and the white of the snow-covered prairie vying with each other in intensity of tone.

When Bert had given an account of his exploit to his mother that morning, she smiled, and omitting to mention the difficulties encountered, said: "You're just like your daddy was."—Southwestern Presbyterian.

The Sleepy Song.

As soon as the fire burns red and low,
And the house upstairs is still,
She sings me a queer little sleepy song
Of sheep that go over the hill.

The good little sheep run quick and soft,
Their colors are gray and white;
They follow their leader, nose to tail,
For they must be home by night.

And one slips over, and one comes next,
And one runs after behind,
The gray one's nose at the white one's tail,
The top of the hill they find.

And when they get to the top of the hill
They quietly slip away;
But one runs over, one comes next—
Their colors are white and gray.

And over they go, and over they go,
And over the top of the hill;
The good little, gray little sheep,
And the house upstairs is still.

And one slips over, and one comes next—
The good little, gray little sheep.
I watch how the fire burns red and low,
And she says that I fall asleep.

—Josephine Dodge Daskam, in Century.

The Artist and the Monkey.

The friendship between them came about in this way: A book was to be published in which a small gray monkey played a very important part. The publishers wished to illustrate the book with many pictures, and because this artist was known to be so fond of animals that he drew them better than most others, he was asked to make these illustrations. If I were to mention his name, you would know it at once.

He read the manuscript and then set about finding his models. Men, women, and children were at hand to answer his purpose, but where was the monkey to be found?

He went up to Central Park and looked among the swinging, chattering, wrinkled-face creatures. Finally he found one answering to the description in the manuscript. In order to make his drawings before the crowd of visitors flocked to the menageries, he used to get up very early in the bright spring mornings, and go and sit before the great monkey cage and make sketches of the little creature in the various queer positions that it seemed fond of taking.

After a time the monkey noticed him, and came to the very wires of the cage at once upon his arrival every morning.

It reached for a pencil, smelled of it, turned it over many times, bit the lead off at the sharpened end, and gravely gave it back with an air that said: "I am surprised that you do not know how to prepare your pencils."

But all the time it seemed to the artist that the monkey was sad or ill. Now, the artist was a tall man and broad-shouldered. His head reached far higher than most men we meet. Perhaps that was why every small weak thing seemed to know and like for you know large natures are weak.

So he set himself to find out what it was that troubled his little friend. The keeper was called and questioned.

"Oh, the little gray monk is all right," said the keeper. "You're payin' him a good deal of attention, an' he thinks he's got to make out a case. Monkeys are awful fakirs; an' them little gray ones are sharper'n most."

So the artist went on with his work, and the monkey sat by the wires, chattering his sad little tale, all about the home he had left in a tall cocoanut tree, and the friends that were like himself.

And the artist answered: "Yes, yes, old fellow, it's a big shame!" And his heart was very tender toward his little gray friend.

Then the monkey began to rub its little hand across its stomach, as if it were in pain. The keeper was called again.

"I tell you I'm afraid there's something the matter with the little fellow, after all."

The keeper watched the small creature a minute or two, but it sat perfectly still.

"He's all right," said the keeper again. "He's young, an' he's growin' fast. Growin' pains, maybe."

When the keeper had gone, the little monkey came very close to the side of the cage and chattered very softly, and reached out one little gray arm. The artist went up to the cage. The monkey took one of his fingers, and with a great deal of looking over its shoulder and chattering and twisting about, rubbed the fingers up and down over the front of his little gray fur waistcoat.

And what do you think?

The artist found a strong string tied tightly about the monkey's stomach. The end had been broken off and the fur had covered it from sight. It had been tied on when the monkey was little, and, while the poor thing had grown larger, the string had remained the same and was cutting into the flesh.

The artist at once took out his knife and opened a shining blade. This frightened the monkey, but after a little, faith in his big friend helped him to be brave.

The cord was cut and found to have made a sore all about the waist of the little one. The artist went at once to the attendant, who brought some ointment, and together they took the little sufferer from his cage. But the monkey would let no hand but that of his artist friend touch the wound, so the big man turned surgeon and dressed it carefully.

Afterwards when the pictures for the book had all been made and the sore mark under the little waistcoat had long been healed, whenever the artist chanced to stop before the monkey cage—even if many people were there—he was sure to hear a joyous chattering and see a little figure come flying to the bars and beckon with all its might. Then the small hands were rubbed across the small stomach, while merry thanks were chattered for the old-time service of gentleness and pity.—New York Herald.

He Got Even.

Mark Twain tells this story of how he got even with a canny lassie, who was telegraph operator at the Glasgow end of a London line:

"I had run up to Glasgow on my way to the Highlands," said Mr. Clemens, "and stepped into a telegraph and postal station to send a dispatch to a friend in London. I asked several questions as to how long it would take, when the message would be delivered, etc. The girl at the desk was inclined to be snubish, and at the third or fourth question she cut me dead.

"But I got even with her. I just sent my friend this message: 'Arrived safely. Girls here ugly and bad-tempered.' And she had to send it, too!"

Obedying Instructions.

The boy hung back when the visitor spoke to him and his mother was naturally annoyed.

"Won't you go to Mrs. Jones, Harold?" she said.

"No," replied the boy shortly.

"Don't you like me?" asked Mrs. Jones good-naturedly.

"No, I don't," said the boy.

"Why, Harold!" exclaimed his mother. "Well, I got licked for not telling the truth yesterday, and I ain't taking no chances today," protested the boy.

The Green Witch.

CHAPTER XIII.

The next day, which was Sunday, George did not look into his school-books. He thought perhaps Flora was right, that he had been studying too hard, and that this had unnerved him. But he believed that his nightly expeditions to the cattle-shed had something to do with the visions which had haunted him. He resolved to go Monday and Tuesday, as in the past week, and then, if possible, dismiss it from his mind. In the afternoon, he sought a shady nook in the yard, and deliberately gave himself up to recollections of his mother. He brought back her pretty young face, her sunny smile, her gay laughter. He almost fancied he could see her slight form running over the green sward now dotted by leaves of many colors. How like a girl she had been. How like a girl—until that cloud began to throw its shadow! What cloud? What shadow? Nay, it disappeared under his earnest scrutiny. He would not think of that. He would think of her only in those girlish moods, when he and she played and romped like two children. He wondered, as the golden sunshine quivered through the half-stripped branches, how the sudden thought of her face at the window had given him terror. If he could see a face resembling hers, he should be glad. The sweet-violet odor which had mingled with his dreams in the summer-house should have brought nothing but happiness, yet it had filled him with fear. How could he fear that mother who had been so gentle and playful in life, and who was now at rest? When Sunday was at its close, he felt strong, once more, to take up his burdens, to move forward and upward. Never again, he told himself, could the thought of his dead mother chill his heart. So it was, Monday night, as he pursued his lonely way through the autumn woods. The rustle of the leaves, the snapping of dry weeds under his feet, the queer shapes formed in the darkness by masses of tangled limbs brought no thrill of fear. When the sweet, young face of the departed rose before him, he crowned it with the garland of a loving thought. He hoped to find Marget at the waterfall and to plead with her not to come to the Stoner's and bring disgrace upon them; but the wood was deserted. He signed Spot's name in the book, and returned home disappointed.

Early Tuesday morning a telegram was delivered at the Stoner grocery for George from his aunt Martha. It bade him come at once to his father's death-bed. A second messenger brought him the amount necessary for the journey, which his aunt had also telegraphed.

"You must go, of course," said Mr. Stoner to the grief-stricken son. "But don't stay a minute longer than can be helped. When—it's all over, come back to me. There's nothing for you out in Florida. I'll promote you the day you return. I've already spoken to Bill Klupertack about driving my wagon. I need you at the desk. Now remember, I need you! And if you lose time, you'll lose a big opening, young man."

George packed his trunk, but the train did not leave till evening. For some time he was unable to think of anything coherently, save the fact that his dear father lay dying. But suddenly came the thought, "I cannot write Spot's name in the book! He will be ruined!"

The reflection caused him acute anguish, as much for Flora's sake as for his room-mate's. At first he thought wildly of begging Bill Klupertack to undertake the mysterious mission. Then he reflected that he had no right to entrust Spot's secret to another. Besides, Bill was a gossip. And while he was away, there would be no one to stand between Marget and the disgrace of the Stoners. Surely she would come to demand her five hundred dollars, after her father had cast her forth into the world.

"You might just as well drive the wagon till near train-time," observed Mr. Stoner, as George entered the store, restive and miserable. "It'll help take your mind off your trouble, and, besides, I've paid for this day, you know."

"Why, of course," said George with a pitiful smile. "Mr. Stoner, I just felt as if everything stopped when I read that telegram. It seems like nothing can go on as it did before."

"It can, though," said Mr. Stoner. "Old Poll will pull that wagon, and deliver crackers and sardines when I'm in the grave. Death doesn't stop anything in this world, except the beating of one heart."

So George delivered as usual, and sought in vain for some relief from his difficulties. He could not bid Spot good-by, as his friend had lain for days in a state of unconsciousness. At the last moment he sought Mrs. Binitier.

"Good-by, Mrs. Binitier," he said. "Will you tell Mrs. Stoner and Flora good-by for me?"

"Yes," said the housekeeper severely. "I can't disturb Mrs. Stoner now, she

The Wise Commercial Traveler

The commercial travelers of the country are subjected to many demands that tell on health. They have to catch trains at all hours of the day and night, put up at all kinds of bad hotels, eat poor food and swallow it in a hurry and do other things that play havoc with the stomach and cause dyspepsia, indigestion, etc. To relieve these bad effects the traveling men of the country have united in the use of

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets

They find—just as every one else who tries them finds—that there is nothing on earth that equals this remedy in affording immediate relief and effecting permanent cures for indigestion, dyspepsia and bad stomachs. A St. Louis Traveling man says:

"I would as soon think of being without my sample case or mileage book as a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. They keep my stomach in perfect condition no matter what I eat and under all circumstances."

The reason for this is plain. They themselves digest the food perfectly and properly and permit the stomach to rest and get well and strong.

is with George. She must not be disturbed. Good-by, young sir."

"Where is Flora?" he inquired.

"She is not here, she is away," said the other. "Oh, I'll tell her good-by for you! I'll be glad to do it. If she was here, it would just distress her to see you. She is a girl. And you oughtn't to want to make her unhappy because you are. You ought to bear up, young sir. You ought to be a Christian!"

"Thank you," said George, meekly. The day had already carried his trunk to the station. He hastened to follow afoot. He bought his ticket, and now was added to his sorrow the fresh disappointment of missing Flora's farewell.

After the train leaves the station at Burr City, it halts at a tank, not a hundred yards distant. At first George thought he would walk down to the tank and board the train, and by this additional exercise drive melancholy thoughts away. But there came to him a sudden yielding to misfortune, a passive despair which for a time refused to be resisted. He entered the car, threw himself in a seat, and covered his face with his hands. The people about him were strangers; but had they been acquaintances, he was not in a condition to care. The tears coursed down his face and he made no effort to check them.

"George," said a familiar voice. Some one sat down beside him. He looked up quickly and sought his handkerchief, while a smile struggled to his face.

"Where do you come from?" he exclaimed, rubbing his eyes.

"I ran off," said Flora, smiling, and then looking grave. "I was in the depot when you bought your ticket, but you didn't look around."

"You ran off!" he echoed, looking wistfully into her bright face. "But you mustn't! You can't. I—I can't let you, Flora!"

"I am going to get off at the tank, you know," she said.

"Oh!" exclaimed the other beginning to laugh.

"Did you think I was running off to Florida with you?" cried Flora in amazement at his preposterous suspicion.

"I didn't know what to think," said George. "I never know what you are going to do, Flora."

"How would you have liked it?" she inquired.

"Oh, it would be so good, if you could go with me! I mean if everybody knew, and I was taking care of you. It would keep me from thinking." His voice was halted by a sob.

Flora took his hand and held it upon her knee. "I am sorry," she said, "so, so, so sorry! But maybe he won't die. Maybe when you get there, you'll find him better."

The train gave a jerk and drew out from the station. George said, "Flora, it was good of you to come. I was feeling bad, for one thing, because I hadn't seen you, and didn't know when I would see you again. It was so good of you to come."

"Was it?" said Flora. "I wonder if mamma would think so. I'll not tell her, anyway!"

"Maybe it was wrong," he conceded reluctantly.

"You know it was wrong!" cried Flora.

"Yes, you oughtn't," he said feebly.

"But don't you bother, George, it isn't you doing wrong, so you just go on and enjoy it. As for me, I like wrong things, dancing and cards and late buggy-riding, and running off to the tank, and most everything that's forbidden!"

"Well, I am enjoying it," declared George whose eyes were now free from tears, and bright from comfort.

"You won't ever doubt that I am your friend after this, will you, George?" she said, as the engine stopped at the tank.

"I never shall!" he exclaimed.

"George, what is Spot's secret? You said you were bothering about somebody's secret, and when I guessed Spotsy, you didn't deny."

"I can't tell you anything, Flora. I promised."

"Was it about money?" asked Flora.

"I can't tell anything. Please don't ask me."

"Is Tuck Hootin in it?" she demanded. "And wasn't it with cards?"

"I don't know what you mean. But if you guessed right I couldn't tell. Don't guess anybody else."

"Now, George, when I said Tuck Hootin, wasn't I getting warm?"

George made no answer.

"So it's Tuck," remarked Flora. "I thought so. Jim Greer is in it, too. Linnie knows about Jim. But of course Tuck Hootin hates Spotsy worse because pa discharged him. Oh, I must get off. Good-by, George!"

"I'll never forget how you came to

DEAR MADAM: Please Read My Free Offer

Words of Wisdom to Sufferers from a Lady of Notre Dame, Indiana.

I send free of charge to every sufferer this great Woman Remedy, with full instructions, description of my past sufferings and how I permanently cured myself.

You Can Cure Yourself at Home Without the Aid of a Physician.

It costs nothing to try this remedy once, and if you desire to continue its use, it will cost you only twelve cents a week. It does not interfere with your work or occupation. I have nothing to sell. Tell other sufferers of it; that is all I ask. It cures everybody, young or old.

If you feel bearing down pains as from approaching danger, pain in the back and bowels, creeping so-called female complaint, then write to Mrs. M. Summers, Notre Dame, Ind., for her free treatment and full instructions. Like myself thousands have been cured by it. I send it in a plain envelope.

Mothers and Daughters will learn of a simple family remedy, which quickly and thoroughly cures female complaints of every nature. It saves worry and expense and the unpleasantness of having to reveal your condition to others. Vigor, health and happiness result from its use.

Wherever you live I can refer you to well-known ladies in your neighborhood, who know and will testify that this family remedy cures all troubles peculiar to their sex, strengthens the whole system and makes healthy and strong women. Write to-day, as this offer may not be made again.

me in my trouble," said George. He looked at her golden hair as the western sun shot through the opposite window and lay calm and red upon it. Suddenly he exclaimed, as they stood upon the platform, "You little sunbeam!"

Flora's eyes danced. "You big sunbeam!" she cried, slowly descending the car-step. There was the sound of creaking chains as the waterspout was drawn up beside the tank. George stood upon the step as she paused on the ground before him. "And my eyes?" she said suddenly, her face thrown back, and the sunlight upon its creamy tint.

"They haven't changed, except for the better," he cried, smiling. "I was all wrong that night."

"And do they still tell everything?"

"Yes, I think so. Yes, they do."

"And do you like what they say?" she asked. Suddenly her face was as red as the sunlight on her hair.

"Flora!" cried George, leaping from the step. There was the sound of a shrill whistle, mingled with that of escaping steam.

"Oh, you will be left!" cried Flora running away. The train started convulsively, and George regained the platform. Flora turned and waved her handkerchief, and the next moment the tank hid her from sight.

Business Notes.

Our baptismal suits are giving good satisfaction and no complaints have ever been filed with us, owing to the character of the goods.

Our wall mottoes are what you want for decorating the house of God, the texts are very appropriate. Size 8x10; at 25 cents each.

You may have what few copies of the Choral Festival remain at 25 cents. For recitations for all occasions, this is one of W. W. Dowling's best.

We have sent out this week "car loads" of Popular Hymns No. 2, for the "singing fraternity" seem to appreciate a good thing when they see it.

The American Standard Revised Bible has come to stay and the sooner you get into the "band wagon," the better for you. We have them from 45 cents to $10.35.

For pure and elevating sentiment, for English language in its purity, for the true records of one of our best men, we commend you to "Life of Pendleton," by F. D. Power, at $1.50.

Hoffmann's Pocket Memorandum supplies a longfelt want with the busy pastor who must necessarily abbreviate in time and matter used, and sells at a price much less than formerly, 50 cents.

For summer reading, put into the hands of the young people books like Altar Stairs, $1.50, Mary Aldmore, $1.00 in cloth, 50 cents in paper, Hugh Carlin, $1.00. These are elevating and beneficial.

E. C. Bargh, Kinmundy, Ill., compliments very lavishly the "Life of John Smith at postage prices." Of course, when we offer a book "bargain," it is real book, not shoddy to catch the unwary, but something real.

The Wedding Tokens, a booklet, are the things for bridal souvenirs, and you will "take" by taking one with you for the young couple when the ties are fastened, other young people seeing the booklet also; 50 cents.

Here is a sample. We have a few copies of Milligan, Robt., on the "Great Commission," in the author's best vein, but only a few; so we will put the present supply at 25 cents, formerly $1.00. It is just as good now as years ago; full cloth; only a few.

We shall be more than pleased to have those ordering "Man Preparing for Other Worlds," by Dr. W. T. Moore, to be free in their opinions of the work, feeling that the more the brethren learn of that excellent work, the more they will appreciate it. 500 pages, and at $2.00.

Have you sent in your subscription for our Young Folks, and if you have and have received the World's Fair Souvenir Portfolio, is it not fully as nice as we described it to be? At the price, this is your opportunity, as we will not wait on tardy people; 75 cents for both.

Morning Star in the days of Knowles Shaw was one of the great sellers, for the words and music are both good. If you have never used it in your school or church, you will not make any mistake in ordering the book now, especially at the prices quoted during this reduction sale; 50 cents per dozen, not prepaid. Good board backs.

Dowling's Helping Hand is in demand among the young people in the C. E. work, and puts all the business items in a nutshell for you, while the Guide Book, in Bible-school work, continues to hold first place. The work in both departments will succeed under such directions, if followed.

We like "Tidings of Salvation." Of course, it was one of the most popular song books ever given the public, but many of the schools have used it, if yours has not, you will do well to order them at $1.00 per dozen in board, not prepaid; or in limp, at 75 cents, not prepaid. But only present stock at these prices. Hear?

E. H. Kellar has just brought from the press a booklet of 50 pages, being a Review of Instrumental Music in Christian Worship, by Elder W. T. Kidwill. This is a "down to date" presentation of the question, and very concisely and tersely put, and among certain communities in parts of Missouri, Texas and Tennessee, it will do much good. We wish for it a large circulation, so put the price at ten cents, trusting the brethren will use them in quantities. It is courteous, manly and brotherly throughout. Send for a copy, and send it to any friend after the "ancient order," such not always being in biblical order.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumphs speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

It is the new idea. Hitherto the Mormons have been the proselytizers.

Converting the Mormons.

They went out to the wilderness, their promised land, and established themselves. Then when they were waxing strong they sent out their emissaries, even to foreign nations, to win converts to the practices and beliefs of Brigham Young. The recent controversy over the seating of Senator Smoot and its attendant protests from the press and various organizations show a healthy public opinion on the subject. Added to this, we have the determination on the part of some of the big religious bodies to fight the common enemy in its very citadel. The Presbyterian assembly, the Methodist conference and the Baptist missionary union have all, in their recent sessions, expressed strong views upon the subject and recommended vigorous action. Nothing will be left undone to increase the efficiency of home missions. The school and the church is to be strengthened in Utah. Christianity and Americanism must overcome Mormonism. Will Disciples of Christ be content to let the denominational organizations do all the battling? Is there not a great field for the primitive gospel in Utah?

One of the greatest victories for the methods of arbitration is seen in the agreement made between the anthracite coal operators and the miners. This has now been in operation over a year. Neither side was wholly satisfied at first, but in operation the verdict rendered has seemingly been justifiable. Only 116 cases have been presented, according to the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, secretary of the arbitration commission. And the representatives of the operators have informed him that "the miners are trying sincerely and to the best of their ability to abide by the award, while the representatives of the miners, on the other side, have given an emphatic assurance that the operators are doing all they can, and sincerely, to carry out the provisions of the award of the commission." This goes to show that the spirit that rules a man is far more important than the abstract question of right or wrong. Were the principle of the gospel, the spirit of in honor preferring the other, ever really to get hold upon men, how comparatively simple a matter it would be to find the adjudication that would save the great friction, hard feelings and loss of property and life now incidental to labor and capital conflicts.

"There was a man there who had a withered hand." This is a Bible text.

The Withered Hand and the Modern Man.

But it is a text, too, in every-day life. It is of the nature of "sermons in stones," and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson in a baccalaureate sermon has been using it in a trenchant fashion to drive home the truth readily acknowledged in the challenge, yet largely ignored in the living, that we are burdened with various classes of ineffective citizens. He cited the man who cannot hold the ballot—cannot wield the instrument of the American freeman in hewing the path for American freedom. It is this man who is usually a great talker. He admits the evil but—he becomes even jocose when he talks about any "fanatics" who think it worth an effort to try to better the evil conditions he himself sees so clearly. Such a man has a withered hand. Then another man, who can read some ephemeral book or newspaper filled with the blackness of scandal and crime and foolishness cannot hold the Bible or a hymn-book. He has no power to go out and overcome difficulties, to dare great things for God and humanity. He stands on the shore and makes sarcastic remarks about foreign missions, home missions and college settlements. The men with these withered hands to-day need the healing touch of Jesus just as did he of old, for as Dr. Jefferson pointed out, the cure for these evils will be found in an honest effort to follow Jesus of Nazareth.

The American as a colonizer has as a consequence to revise his attitude to some things that have been sacred. His inalienable right to a trial by a jury of his peers for certain offenses has just been declared inapplicable to the new American, made such in the Philippines by right of conquest and purchase. Certain newspaper men convicted of libel in a court at Manila asked for a jury trial. The Supreme Court of the Philippines decided against them, and this decision has been upheld by the United States Supreme Court, though it was a five to four decision. In its local aspects the decision is a sane one, but the consequences thereof may be wide-reaching. The experience of Great Britain, however, the greatest of all colonizing countries, may be accepted as a reasonable plea that the great principle of Magna Charta will not be obliterated from the American constitution. For every American has the hope in his breast, that, having undertaken the responsibility of training a new people, he will one day give them those privileges which he believes have been fundamental in making his own nation the great nation it is.

It was a witty Anglo-French schoolmaster, we believe, who gave expression to the wish that if he could be born again he would have the Creator make him an American woman. That is a very common sentiment in these latter days, for the real American woman is becoming better known abroad. For instance, several visitors to St. Louis have received a very different conception of the real article from what they had derived from the representative title-hunters and money-spenders, whose escapades and society ways have long been "good copy" for the newspapers. Even in Germany, where woman is the housewife, the truer conception of the American woman and what she stands for in the world-movement is being better appreciated. At Berlin, the international woman's congress has just opened. That very fact marks an advance in Germany's womanhood. And the unheard-of thing—a farewell banquet at the expense of the municipality—has been decided upon, and even Chancellor von Buelow is to give a reception in honor of the delegates. The great deference shown to the United States as the leading country in the world in the woman's movement impressed the American delegates.

The American Woman and the World.

It is difficult for one not on the ground or without the full evidence before him to decide who is to blame for the desperate things that have been happening in Colorado. The cost of the various strikes during the past sixteen months is estimated at over $23,000,000. With the exception of a few brief periods, the national guard has been on duty at one point or another in the state since early in 1903. The closing of the Portland mine may bring the whole question at issue before the federal court. That would be the best thing that could happen. If the contention of the state military authorities be true, they have abundant reason for their recent action. For the reign of crime has reached a climax that demands prompt and severe repression. Union labor has tried to carry things with a high hand, and crime has resulted. Whether the criminals were the miners is a matter we cannot adjudicate upon. It is a matter for the careful sifting of the courts. But such outrages as have happened cannot be tolerated, whether due to union or non-union labor, or the military.

It is more than a twice-told tale; it is an old story. Until the map of Europe is changed, or a new Gladstone orders Britain's navy to the Bosphorus, or America is thrilled by the horrors inflicted upon the subject races by the Turks and orders them to cease forever, it is likely to continue to be an old, but ever new, story. For there will apparently never be an end to the Turks' butchering of Christians whenever opportunity occurs. The French foreign minister made a statement in the chamber of deputies the other day, which makes it certain that there has been another wholesale slaughter of Armenians. Some indications were that twenty-five villages had been destroyed. M. Delcasse says that he has informed the Porte that "the time for repression is over." But France loves Russia, and Russia wants to get her ships through the Dardanelles and—the Sultan smiles. If the so-called Christian powers would really act as policemen and put Mr. Turk in prison for awhile the whole world would approve. But the powers are self-seekers. That is the whole trouble.

Some years ago, after a tour around the continent of Europe, we landed in New York in the early oyster season. We ordered bivalves. We noticed that the waiter hung around our chair when there was no occasion for it, and on reflection we knew he was looking for his—tip. This in the land of the free! To such a state has the tipping nuisance finally come that the legislature of Massachusetts passed a law, this spring, making it a penal offense for an employe to take a "fee" from a patron. On the other hand, at the largest passenger station in New York City, the railway company has cut off entirely the wages of the porters, leaving them to get what they can out of the passengers. This is worse than anywhere in Europe. In England, for instance, the railway porter gets his five to eight or ten dollars a week, and he picks up almost as much from his four and six cent tips.

He never expects more, and he feels that he is a wage-earner and gives good return to the company for his hire, as he does. But there is no excuse whatever for the system in America. Wages and salaries are good. The whole system of tipping is vicious and degrading. It is nothing more nor less than "graft" on a small scale, and subjects the man who receives a gratuity to the implication of serfdom, and the man who gives to an unrighteous pride.

We are rapidly approaching the season when the vote is to count. In this country every man has the right to the expression of his opinion, and when great issues are at stake and he fails to cast his vote he to that extent fails in his citizenship. The present issue in Missouri is one of the greatest that has ever been before the electorate of any state. In its essence it is the question of the government by the people, and for righteousness, or a government by a clique in the interest of a clique. It is generally conceded that Mr. Folk will secure the nomination of the Democratic party for the governorship, but until recently not so much heed has been given as to who will occupy the other places on the ticket and what might be the effect upon Mr. Folk's policy should those antagonistic to him be selected to make the fight. Mr. Cook and Mr. Allen have been prominent candidates for offices and have received a very large support. It is one of the strange things to us that there has not been greater opposition to their candidature before this. But the time has now come when plain speaking is a necessity. The election of any tainted men on the ticket with Mr. Folk will be a very severe blow to the whole program for reform that was started with his boodle prosecutions, and which the best element of the state desires to see carried through. Mr. Folk has given explanations why he has not personally come out in direct opposition to certain aspirants for office on the ticket with him. He believes in the right of the people to select their own candidates, and he does not propose to dictate who shall be put on the ticket with him, but while he regards it as improper for him to meddle with the other nominations he does believe that it is not improper for him to express his views, not of men, but of principles. That is a very fair position to take, though it has led many to question Mr. Folk's real sincerity. He has, however, given unmistakable evidence that he is not allied with any ring or coterie and that he wishes to have certain men whose names have been prominently mentioned kept off the ticket. "In order that this battle may be waged effectively," he said in his speech at Bolivar, "no man should be put on the ticket who is not willing to uncompromisingly attack the corruptionists and their allies. No man who expects any support from the boodle element, or who truckles to undesirable influences, ought to be nominated for any office. This applies to every place on the ticket. We should have a ticket that will appeal to all lovers of good government, a ticket that means something and one that will not raise false issues to divert the public mind. The fight against corruption has only begun in Missouri." That language is definite enough. Mr. Folk has spoken. Now there must be no compromise of this principle by the people, for it is upon the people of this state and their representatives that the selection depends. Messrs. Cook and Allen have not stood for the same idea that Mr. Folk stands for, and that the people who want Mr. Folk to be governor stand for. These men have antagonized Mr. Folk. If the people of this state want the principles for which Mr. Folk stands to succeed, they must put into office with him men who are of the same mind as himself.

There is another side of the Christian union movement that we sometimes forget about.

When Union is Not Desired.

Were we all imbued with the right spirit; were we really striving for Christian union and not church union, there would be little to stand in the way of the early fulfillment of the Savior's prayer. But the human element of personal preference and pride plays a great part in preventing what people are more and more coming to admit is the true and the ideal state as regards the Christian Church. A prominent British paper has been led to suggest that the morality of the outer world which calls for arbitration of difficulties in international and business circles, ought to govern churches. Twenty years ago this editor was not thinking in this fashion. Since then he has learned much of what the Disciples have taught, and the church of which he is a member has united forces with another great church. Unfortunately, however, there was a disaffected minority, and this minority is seeking, through the law, to break the union. And the British House of Lords has determined to rehear arguments. Law in the old country means law, and pending a judicial decision that possibly, though hardly probably, might strip the majority of this Scotch church of all its real and personal property, it would be well if conciliation and arbitration could bring about a settlement under which the conservative, schismatic faction of the Free church could be given some of the funds which the United Free church now claims. This controversy shows us the difficulty of Christian union when people do not want to be united. Trust funds, financial considerations can always be appealed to. But the majority usually ought to rule.

Christian Union and Primitive Christianity.

We have recently run across a somewhat independent and philosophic statement concerning the religious movement in which our readers are most deeply interested, which shall serve as a text for this editorial. We make the following extract from the statement referred to:

There are among the Disciples two interpretations of their mission. One emphasizes union, the other the return to primitive Christianity. These were more closely joined in the minds of the pioneer Disciples. To-day it is not obvious that union is best stated in terms of a return to apostolic conditions, or that such a return, if it were possible, would bring union. Therefore these two elements of the "plea" are drifting apart and becoming, perhaps unconsciously, the standards of two parties. The extreme conservatives insist upon a return to the apostolic church at all hazards, and seek to make the very words of scripture the criterion of their success. The liberal party emphasize union, and urge as its basis the spirit and principles of Christianity as these have become clarified and established by the whole history of the church.

It is evident that this was written by one familiar with the history of thought and discussion among the Disciples of Christ, and yet it does not seem to us to state with sufficient accuracy the real point at issue between the two schools of thought to which the writer refers. For instance, it is hardly correct to say that some of us plead for Christian union and others for a return to primitive Christianity. We are sure that the men who, under God, inaugurated this movement never separated in their minds the thought of Christian union from the other thought of a return to the simplicity and catholicity of New Testament Christianity. On no other condition did they believe Christian union to be practicable. They recognized, as all the world recognizes, the impossibility of effecting Christian union on any of the existing creeds devised by church councils. They insisted, as those who came after them have always insisted, that we must repudiate human creeds and confessions of faith as foundations of Christian union and communion, and must return to the original creed of Christianity, on which Jesus Christ said he would build his church. If there is anyone to-day who dreams of Christian union on any other basis than that, he is dreaming of something quite apart from the thought and purpose of the men who originated this movement, and quite different, too, from anything that is aimed at by the great body of the Disciples of Christ to-day.

The remark that "To-day it is not obvious that union is best stated in terms of a return to apostolic conditions, or that such a return, if it were possible, would bring union," does not do justice, we think, to the conception which our fathers had, and which is held by our representative men to-day, as to what is meant by a return to primitive Christianity. It is clearly recognized, and always has been, that there are many conditions and features of the apostolic churches that ought not to be reproduced in this age, if they could be. We ought, indeed, to be careful to define what we mean, when we speak of restoring primitive Christianity. It is quite certain, we think, that if there could be a return to the New Testament confession of faith, to New Testament names and terms of membership, and of life, that Christian union would be possible. And this is what we mean by a return to primitive Christianity.

It is true, however, that some among us have emphasized the feature of a return to primitive Christianity above the plea for Christian union, and have given an interpretation to that phrase which has well-nigh obscured and has rendered abortive the plea for Christian union so far as they are concerned. These are they who look into the New Testament as into a new Levitical code, expecting to find chapter and verse for missionary societies, Sunday-schools, instrumental music in the worship, and all the details of present day forms of Christian service. These are they who deduce certain doctrinal propositions from the New Testament and lay such emphasis upon these theological deductions as to practically make them conditions of fellowship. But neither of these classes is to be regarded as representing the religious reformation of the nineteenth century, which combines in its plea the unity of the church with the restoration of the original creed—the Messiahship and divinity of Jesus of Nazareth—and the inspired rule of faith and practice—the New Testament.

The great body of Disciples have never separated in their minds the plea for Christian union from the plea for the restoration of the original basis of union. These two elements were united in the thought of our fathers and are united to-day in the thought of all our representative men. Nor is it a human combination, but a divine order. The only possible or desirable Christian union, is union in Christ and upon Christ, and for Christ. It was because modern Christianity had gotten away from that center and had rallied groups of believers around other centers and foundations, that it became necessary to urge a return to the original center and foundation, which is Christ Jesus the Lord. Jesus Himself blended together in His intercessory prayer the unity of His disciples with each other, and their union with Himself and the Father. What God has thus joined together, let not man part asunder. Nothing less than the restoration of Christ as the center of the Christian system, and the foundation of the church, will suffice to unite the dis severed people of God. This is the capital and most distinguishing feature of our movement, and must not be neglected or obscured.

Opposed to Organic Union.

The Southern Presbyterian Assembly, recently held in Mobile, was marked by a great deal of feeling and spirited discussion, judging by the reports which come to us through the Mobile Register. The question which seems to have precipitated the most heated discussion was "the appointment of a special committee to confer with other religious bodies desiring closer relations." A substitute was offered for this resolution to the effect that "in view of existing and impending conditions, while expressing the deepest fraternal interest and praying for the most effective co-operation in all the work of Christ's kingdom, our assembly does not see its way clear at this time to appoint a committee for general conference with other Presbyterian bodies looking to closer relations, as has been asked for in the overtures recited above."

After a prolonged discussion, the substitute was voted down and the original report adopted, but only with the distinct understanding that nobody favored organic union and that such conference did not look to such union. We were surprised to see how much of the spirit that was provoked by the controversies in 1861 at the time of separation, still remains. The opposition to the appointment of the committee was based solely on the ground of the fear that it might lead to organic union, and organic union, it was declared, was entirely out of the question. Even the telegram from the Northern Church, in assembly at Buffalo, expunging all aspersions upon the Southern Church during the war, did not seem to lessen the opposition to a reunion. The fact that the Northern Church is about to effect a union with the Cumberland Presbyterians was urged as one reason why no action should be taken now looking to closer relations. It was "unwise to take a step looking to union with the Northern Church when that church seems about to assimilate to itself or to assimilate itself to a body and a creed so fully and notoriously Arminian as the Cumberland."

Of course the discussion offered a fine opportunity for appealing to the gallery. "Our beloved church;" "our southern church;" its "proud history;" its "splendid traditions;" its "great name," all were endangered by this agitation of the subject of union. One speaker declared that it was wrong to be wasting time in discussing the subject of organic union instead of considering the great question of converting the world, wholly unmindful of the fact that the Lord Himself had hinged the latter event upon the former. To one occupying our point of view, the discussion was no less than amazing and saddening. Few of the speakers even referred to the teaching of the New Testament on the subject of union or seemed to regard it as desirable that Christ's prayer for the oneness of His followers should be realized.

The whole history of the schism and separation of the Presbyterian Church into its Northern and Southern divisions is full of warning, showing as it does how easy it is to foment division, and how exceedingly difficult it is, after the lapse of years, to heal such division. The reunion of divided Presbyterians is, we fear, further away than we had been led to believe. And yet there is no reason for discouragement. "God buries His workmen, but carries on His work." Indeed, that is one of the means by which He carries on His work to larger issues, and brings forward His church to new eras of progress and power. When the generation that inherited the prejudices of the war period has passed away, then, and perhaps not till then, will the reunion between Northern and Southern Presbyterians become practicable.

Editor's Easy Chair.

We have all heard [of the device of the indolent man, who, to shorten his evening devotions, attached a form of prayer to the foot of] his bed, and, pointing to it, as he turned in, would say, "Them's my sentiments"! It is not mere indolence, however, but a recognition of a poet's superior ability in interpreting our feelings, just now, that leads us to print the following lines from the Washington Star, as the Easy Chair's "sentiments," thrown into poetic form:

It's mighty aggravatin' to be hangin' round
the town
When the pavement starts to sizzle an' the sun is beatin' down;
To think about the waste that's goin' on not far away
Where the leaves are rustlin' softly an' the sunbeams love to play.
I know the birds in song are pourin' out their hearts
With no one near to listen to their sweet melodious arts,
I know the crimson clover is a-noddin' in the breeze
An' glintin' in the sunlight over there where no one sees,
An' the honeysuckle's bendin' o'er the bosom of the stream,
An' the fish leap up an' settle with a splashin'
silvery gleam,
An' the whippoorwill at night time is a-tellin' of his grief
With none to give him sympathy or offer him relief,
It's mighty aggravatin' to be hangin' 'round
the town
Where they tell you to "step lively" an' the car conductors frown,
An' feel your heart grow fainter in the bustle an' the haste
As you think about the beauty an' the song that's goin' to waste.

But what is a man to do about it when all the world is in "town," and one's door bell or telephone bell is ringing almost continually, and when calls for service multiply with the progress of the year? Well, for the present we must heed these calls for service, but we serve notice now that this must not be expected to continue throughout the summer. We have sent word to the leaves to keep "a-rustlin'," to the birds to keep up their concerts, to the "crimson clover" to just go on "a-noddin' in the breeze," and to the bending honeysuckle and leaping fish and complaining whippoorwill to continue doing business at the old stand until we arrive on the scene. If Bob White can arrange his plans so as to give us a few familiar notes from a neighboring wheatfield, we will be obliged to him. Meanwhile we will try to endure, with patience, the glory and glamour and pageantry of the World's Fair, and seek to extract as much enjoyment and instruction as possible from "the greatest show on earth." The most interesting and instructive part of the whole Exposition, to us, is the human beings who gather there from every land under the whole heaven. While one sees much to humble his pride in the people and products of the leading nations of the world, on the other hand he sees much in the lower tribes and peoples and their crude handiwork, to impress him with a sense of gratitude for the blessings and opportunities of a Christian civilization which he has too little appreciated. It is a far cry from the highest type of American or European civilization to the Igorrotes of the Philippines, or the lowest savages from the Painted Plains of Arizona. But they are all human beings, in different environments and in different stages of development.

And so Mr. Russell Sage, octogenarian and multimillionaire of New York city, does not believe in what he calls "the vacation habit." It is unjust to employers, he says—this custom of employes taking two weeks off in the summer season—and as for others, it is unnecessary. He never took a vacation in his life and never felt the need of one. How characteristic this is of the man who has piled up his millions, but in whose veins there flows little of the milk of human kindness! Who can doubt that if Russell Sage had formed "the vacation habit" in his young manhood, before the fountain of his sympathies and generosity had frozen up, and had learned to love nature as well as he loves money, and could have become as much interested in birds and flowers, and streams and mountains, as in the accumulation of interest and in exacting usury, he would have been a wiser Sage and a better man, though he might have had less money? Mr. Sage's example is a strong argument for vacations. We feel justified in referring to him as a warning against resisting "the vacation habit." From his point of view, he may be logical enough, but his point of view is that of a money-changer, and not that of one who loves nature and who would keep close to its heart and to the heart of its Author.

There is a pathos in growing old unconsciously. A member of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which recently met at Los Angeles, told us that the vote retiring their six oldest bishops was one of the saddest and most pathetic scenes of the conference. They had not anticipated it. Only one, Bishop Merrill, recognized the inevitable and tendered his resignation beforehand. They had not noticed that they were less efficient than in former years. Doubtless each one of them believed he could "preach as well as he ever could!" Others could see their failing powers, but not they. That is where the pathos comes in. It is not easy to yield official station and leadership to younger hands and feel that while others must increase we must decrease. Dr. Mark Hopkins, president of Williams College, resigned against the protest of many friends because, as he said, he wanted to be the first one to discern the fact that increasing years made such a step wise. Not everyone has the wisdom or discernment to gracefully retire at the right time. But, on the other hand, there is sometimes undue haste in retiring men who possess the capacity for wise leadership. But, sooner or later, the older men must give place to the younger, and nothing can rob this fact of its pathos. But grace on the part of the old, and reverence on the part of their successors, will rob it at least of bitterness.

Questions and Answers.

In the Bible Student notes on "Christ Risen," the lesson for June 19, there is this quotation from Dr. Abbott: "A singular and significant testimony to the truth of the resurrection is afforded by the change of the Sabbath day. It was changed, not by any express command in the New Testament, but by the almost universal consent of the church."

There are two authorities against Dr. Abbott. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible says: "It [the Lord's day] was never confounded with the Sabbath, but carefully distinguished from it. . . . Whatever analogy may be supposed to exist between the Lord's day and the Sabbath, in no passage that has come down to us is the fourth commandment appealed to as the ground of the obligation to observe the Lord's day." McClintock and Strong's Cyclopaedia endorses both of these statements and also says: "If an apostle had set the example of confounding the seventh and the first days of the week, it would have been strange indeed that every ecclesiastical writer for the first five centuries should have avoided any approach to such confusion. They do avoid it; for, as Sabbath is never used by them for the first day of the week, so Lord's day is never used by them for the seventh day."

Now there are two questions:

1. As the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, if there has been such a change, must have been made this side of "the first five centuries," when and by whom was the change made?
2. Should we teach our children in our Bible-schools, as the Bible Student teaches, that the Sabbath day has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, and that we should call the first day of the week the Sabbath?

We should be glad if you would kindly answer these questions in the next issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, so that we can have the help of your answers when this subject comes up in our Bible-schools on Sunday, June 19.

ALLEN HICKEY.

Des Moines, Ia.

1. We do not think Dr. Abbott would wish to be understood as meaning that the Jewish Sabbath, with its spirit, its meaning and its regulations, was transferred from the seventh day to the first day of the week. What he probably means is that the fact that the first Christians gradually ceased observing the seventh day as the sacred day, and began to observe the first, is proof of the resurrection of Christ. Certainly, this was the only use the editor of the Bible Student aimed to make of the quotation. Our querist is right, as are also the authorities he quotes, we think, in denying that the Jewish Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week. The Jewish Sabbath was abolished with the old covenant, of which it was a part, and the Lord's day, the first day of the week, commemorating the resurrection of Christ on that day, succeeded it and is a Christian institution, and should never be confounded with the Jewish Sabbath. It is a great misfortune that the use of the term "Sabbath," as applying to the first day of the week, has become so widely prevalent in the religious world. Among the churches of this reformation the terms "Sabbath" and the "Lord's day" are never used interchangeably, but always in their strict, New Testament sense.

2. By no means. On the contrary, we should teach our children to observe the distinction which the New Testament and early church usage always make between the Sabbath and the Lord's day. The editor of the Bible Student did not mean anything different, by citing the language of Dr. Abbott. The purpose of that quotation was to show that the resurrection of Christ had effected a change in sacred days. Dr. Abbott simply conformed to the popular custom in the use of the term "Sabbath," but we do not think he would antagonize the position taken in Smith's Bible Dictionary and McClintock and Strong's Encyclopedia.

Dr. James Stalker, the noted Scotch preacher, just prior to sailing from New York the other day, said that the life of Christ has been the central point of biblical study for the last fifty years and continually grows in interest. The life of Christ having been the subject of leading study, probably the attention of scholars will, for some time to come, be specially directed to the words of Jesus. Another testimony to the uniqueness of the Bible is that of Sir Edwin Arnold, who, when asked shortly before his death, a few weeks ago, what he, as a man of letters owed to the Bible, replied, "I shall simply say that I owe my education, as a writer, more to the Bible than to any other hundred books that could be named. It is the grandest possible school of style, letting alone all that it must ever be on the moral and spiritual side." To the same effect is the testimony of Daniel Webster, who, having been questioned concerning the matter of his style, said he owed more to the splendid imagery of the Bible than to all other books.

Notes and Comments.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST suggests the propriety of a parliament of the religious press of the country, for the purpose of discussing some "very vital questions." The last of a series of such vital questions which it proposes is the following: "How Far May the Religious Newspaper Deal with the Questions of Historical Biblical Criticism?" This is an easy one. It can be answered without any discussion. The religious newspaper may discuss these questions just as far as it has brains enough and information enough to discuss them correctly.—J. W. M. Garvey in Christian Standard.

Precisely so. It was the too common failure to observe the wise limitation suggested above that led us to propose the question for discussion.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of St. Louis suggests a congress of the religious press in connection with the Exposition. It is a good suggestion.—The Advance.

A good suggestion, like a crying baby in church, should be carried out. Chicago must help us do it.

I note that you are proposing a convention of editors of religious papers. I hope you may be successful in making arrangements. The makers of our religious papers need to get together. I shall be glad to co-operate.—Frederick A. Bisbee, editor Universalist Leader, Boston, Mass.

There is no reason why Boston should be excluded from an enterprise of this kind. Wise men still come from the east, and we, out west, want them to tell us how to conduct a religious newspaper.

The Central Baptist, this city, "seconds the motion" for a Press Congress, and suggests the advertising problem as one that needs looking into. The question might be, "Where is the editor's conscience when certain advertisements are admitted into his columns?" The editor of the Central Baptist also suggests that some of his editorial brethren should "take a few lessons in simple figures to enable them to count the number of their subscribers." We supposed that they were generally experts in that line, from the figures we have seen!

Speaking of heresy-hunting, we believe that Brother Garrison has the distinction of having done that a little more effectively than any other brother among us.—Christian Companion.

But that was not a case of heresy-hunting, Bro. Briney. It didn't need hunting. It was too obvious to require that. It was dealt with effectively by the local congregation, and in a way to save the local church, and to prevent any jar to the brotherhood. The man among us who rejects the authority and the ordinances of Jesus Christ needs no "hunting" or "driving out of the brotherhood." He is out, and soon finds it out.

"We thank thee that we have machinery. Fill it with divine power," prayed Bishop Warren, at the opening of the Methodist Episcopal general conference.—Report of General Conference.

But there is some ecclesiastical machinery that it would be mighty hard for the Lord, even, to fill with divine power. It doesn't seem to fit it. The New Testament method seems to have been to get the divine power first, and let it create the machinery to express itself, as life everywhere forms its own organism.

We do not give much space to questions of "biblical criticism" in our columns, but here is a brother that ought to be conducting a column in some of our papers. He criticizes one of our Sunday-school publications for saying that Jesus told the penitent thief that "this day thou shalt be with me in paradise." He says: "That is calculated to teach people to think that a thief or murderer can go to heaven. It does not say that 'To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise,' but 'To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise?' It is only a question asked. We should be very careful how we teach people." But then it should be said, in palliation, that the scholars who have translated this passage out of the original Greek, never found out what this brother has discovered—that Jesus was asking a question instead of declaring a fact, in the passage quoted. As soon as the scholars of the world have made this discovery, they will place an interrogation mark where the period now occurs. But then, are we to shut the door of hope to penitent thieves?

Dr. Henry G. Weston is one of the most conspicuous figures in the Baptist denomination. Though eighty-six years of age, he is still doing a man's full work in the world. When asked, the other day, how he finds the preaching of to-day, this president of one of the great theological schools replied:

"Well, there is a great deal of philosophical and ethical preaching which would have been just as true if there had never been a Bethlehem or a Calvary. The other day I heard one of the preachers of this style, and I made a memorandum of the authorities he quoted and of the persons to whom he alluded in the course of his sermon, and the list was"—here Dr. Weston took out a notebook and began to read—"Socrates, Aristides, Maurice, Robertson, Kingsley, Arnold, Spinoza, Tulloch, Keble, Newman, Froide, and one Old Testament character, Enoch—and I am not certain that all his hearers identified Enoch as a man from the Bible."

President Weston has touched upon a real weak spot. The art of quotation can be made a very valuable one. But if the gospel be left out of the sermon, the modern thought bouquet is as flowers planted in an arid garden—fair for the moment to look upon, but destined to wither speedily.

Can the Modern Man Be a Christ Man?

This is the question which our student boys and girls and thousands in middle life are asking:

"How can you keep your faith while you think about things?"

So asks the college girl who tells us that between her philosophy classes and her Bible course she gets into more mazes of doubt and uncertainty every day.

So, too, does the college boy, unless he drives out all thought by physical dissipation at football, or in the "Dutch Kitchen" over a beer mug, after hard work in lecture room, laboratory or manual labor shop is over. How can a thinking lad or lassie of to-day, inhabiting the new heavens and the new earth revealed by modern science, be a Christian and "only believe"?

The average college student finished the study of theology some time ago in the Sunday-school under a sweet young lady of sixteen, or twenty, most probably. How can he keep faith now? Graduated from high school into the university, where the professors bid you doubt and question, the old narrow path seems ever narrower; amid quagmires without landmarks on one side, and abysses and quick-sands on the other; or, led up over exceeding high mountains of daring speculation into immensities and infinities, the youth seems to be traveling through rarified atmosphere in a balloon just about to burst.

"I don't know whether I believe in anything," is the despairing cry.

After this, look out for the hardened man, who makes no more fights or struggles, but settles down into sterility and hardness good for this world only—a Confucian Chinaman, without knowing it.

Or, behold the wild-eyed male or female seeker after and victim of every apostle of the isms, needy adventurer, or fatterer on human gullibility. "Ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth," are these "clouds without water." "Thrice dead, plucked up by the root"—they are dead facts stranded on the shores of the oblivious years." Every community is full of them. They are spoil for the spoiler.

Needless to name either the fat foxes or the plucked geese of the twentieth century. Every age, in one form or another, has its typical Brigham Young—superb in physical equipment, amazing master of multitudes, crafty and shrewd, dollar and flesh loving to the last degree. From Cæsar's time until Roosevelt's, also, there will be ever the "weird woman"—"Mother" this or that. Living in cave or cottage of colonial architecture, electric lighted and telephone equipped, at the Delphic oracle or talking over the wires, it is much the same woman.

By William Elliot Griffis, D. D.

Anselm and Aquinas and Edwards, and, still more audaciously and with Barnum believed that average humanity loves to be humbugged, yet he knew also even as Lincoln did—"not all the people all the time." He had to provide new humbugs to tickle the shallow thinkers to whom faith and credulity were the same.

It is not thinking that destroys faith. In fact, to make a trained thinker, a spiritual athlete, the true college professor, seeking to turn out stalwart intellects, yea, and true Christians also, first seeks to melt down, as the sun the icicle, the old ways of thinking, the pretty snow wreaths of the callow student. He cannot fulfill unless he first destroys much. He throws the boy overboard in order to teach him how to swim. So Jesus, against "ye have heard it said in old time," put his, "but I say unto you." Christianity is Christ. All else is dilution.

Yes, my young student friend, there is a way to use your mind and be the stronger in faith! Here Jesus is the teacher of teachers. "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." "Have faith in God." How, do you ask? He replies, "Consider"; that is, think it out slowly. Consider. Sit down, don't be in a hurry. You cannot form either a final philosophy, or a complete theodicy, or an infallible theology in the fermenting stage of your mental career. Wait until exercise interprets life, and life truth. Be a skeptic—in the original sense of that much abused word; that is, shade your eyes from the glare and look steadily. Shut out the world and Babel, and telephone to God in prayer. You'll hear the still small voice, "This is the way, walk ye therein." "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." Contemplate! (Contemplum.) Look all around the temple. Take a broad view, yes, even of mighty philosophies, yet look to him who is greater than all, who is "made unto us wisdom." Words give next to nothing. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, but he that doeth the will of my Father." There is no such thing as religion in words and opinions only; it is life, or it is nothing.

Doing helps us mightily to know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. "If I hadn't got mission work to do, and turned my belief, as far as I had any, into life and action, I should have been an infidel," said my fellow student under Doctor Shedd, and now the successor of Phillips Brooks. Yes, our famous teacher, who, with his eye on a single speck in the ceiling, sharp pointed pencil in hand, took us up into the aspirations of deity, and later showed us "Calvinism, pure and mixed," tried honestly to reconcile to the modern world Augustine and honest self-persuasion, attempted to reconcile Christ to these worthies and, almost, as we thought, to show their equal claims on us.

How far behind seems that world of ideas of even thirty years ago! Yet the Christ is still ahead.

Generation after generation have said, "Lord, Lord, permit us to explain thee and thy teachings, permit us to limit thee by making thee talk our dialect, to clothe thy gospel in terms of our philosophy and view of the universe." How well they succeeded—for a time. Even as in "Arabian Nights," Abraham and the patriarchs are made to talk good orthodox Islam, make pious ejaculations like Mahomet's own, so our old theologians make Ezekiel and Peter talk the language of Rome, Moscow, Augsburg, Westminster and Andover.

Even now men try to perform the same pious legerdemain, expecting to furnish the final philosophy. Still the voices of Gerizim and Jerusalem, of Moscow and Rome, of Protestant and Catholic, of Ritsche and Maurice, of restorationism and Eddyism, of liberal and orthodox, ring out insistently. Each calls, as of old, "Lord, Lord."

Yet, "the word of God is not bound." It cannot be. Living Samson breaks his withes and new ropes. In reality the old Jesus way is still plain. Yes, shining clear, even to the fool, whether wayfaring man on the highway, freshman in college, or baldheaded scholar immersed in walls of books. Blessed is the man who can see the divine Christ as the ever fresh teacher, making obsolete the old hampering systems that are orthodoxies or heterodoxies, certified by sects or ecclesiastical corporations or popular theologians, as compared with the teachings of the Son of man. His teachings are plain. Twenty centuries have added nothing to them, nor can add. If philosopher and theologian, agnostic and confessionalist, school and party, ism and every "new idea," have demonstrated anything, it is their utter impotence to make a Christian. Christ is still ahead, Lord of the centuries, and Christianity means loyalty to him. "Behold, I make all things new," are his own words.

Our grandfathers were nearer in mental outlook on the universe to the Greek fathers and the medieval system makers than we are to our grandfathers. The Protestant reformation was a revolution only in forms; ours of the past fifty years is a revolution in spirit. Most of old apologetics, Paley, Butler and all their host, are hopelessly antiquated; but for us, the men of modern mind in the twentieth century, the Christ, the divine Christ, with the white hair of eternity, has the bright eyes of eternal youth. His word stands. His commands are binding. His way of life is the only one.

So fear not, little maid in college, tossed between the rabbi and the philosopher. Don't read Paul and Augustine and Aquinas and Calvin and Drummond first, and then try to understand the Christ. Read Jesus first. Take him seriously. Prove by practice that his ideas are workable. Believe in his doctrine of the second mile. Demonstrate what it means. You'll not know him well until you do. Then you'll find him divine. Saturate your mind with his mind. Do your Father's will and you'll soon learn how to value all things outside the soul and God, yes, even Bible, church, the fathers, theology and teachers. With Jesus you cannot go wrong. It isn't possible to do so. You may have to walk over Calvary, but not into the mire. Don't even trust Fairbairn too much, my college friend. Once suspected as heterodox, he is now the champion of orthodoxy. I know and love him and his work, but all human philosophy is alike. It is the newspaper for the hour; the Bible, read as a child would read it, is for the ages. Prophecy, knowledge, philosophy, creed, catechism shall fail. The word abides. The text will always be more than the commentary. Jesus' words will never fail. Master the Master. First, last, always, test all things by him. Let philosopher, priest, teacher, new or old, "advanced" or "orthodox," go. Cling to Christ. Walk in his footsteps. Do his will.

So, you find Farrar's Life of Christ a little "gushy." "Rather popular and sensational, isn't it?" you ask. Yes, I'll forgive your "impertinence." It's rather a sign of growth. I thought as you do long ago. Tried in the fire of critical examination, much of Farrar's work will not stand. He did not verify his references. No careless work abides. Helpful as his work once was, it does but illustrate how even literary luminaries and planets, orthodox, seemingly of the first magnitude, soon grow dim. Jesus is the bright and morning star. Even what appeared to us the very heavens and earth of proper belief have already passed away, but Christ's words will never pass away. Twenty centuries only brighten them. "His name is called the word of God."

So, my college maiden, don't fear to think. Have only the fear of the Lord which makes clean, purifies. Even our dear Leader in Gethsemane "was heard in that he feared." The modern man may be a Christ man; yea abundantly, for the modern world is part of the coming perfect world which Jesus came to bring. Somehow or other Jesus of the gospels seems wonderfully at home in it—that is, if we are doing his will and believe his word "in-as-much." Learn what it means to die daily. Keep ever in faith's eye the picture of the Leader "conquering and to conquer," whose armies follow him clothed in white linen, the righteousness of saints. 'Twixt rabbi and seer, "fix your eye upon Jesus." Into that holy city and kingdom not yet come, but ever coming down upon the earth, "the fearful and unbelieving" can never enter; but the brave in faith who do his will are already in it. None more so than they who, seeing the universe with modern eyes, declining, if need be, Greek philosophy and Roman discipline and modern schemes of theology as no necessary part of their Christian mind, sit at the feet of Jesus and walk in his pathway.

"Greater Works."

By Simpson Ely.

"Greater works shall ye do than I have done." These words of our Lord, spoken to his disciples a short time before his death, have been hard for many persons to understand. And yet they express a most blessed truth, and should be full of encouragement to every Christian. No one can live a better life than Jesus lived. He was the only perfect [One. No one can be more thoroughly consecrated to the will of God than was Jesus. No one can announce such vital truths as fell from our Savior's lips. No one can give to the world such exhibitions of love and sympathy as were manifested by the Nazarene.

Notwithstanding all these facts, the immediate and visible results were shamefully meager, and showed how inappreciative was the world at the time he lived in it.

Jesus was despised and rejected of men. Of him the world was not worthy. Though many thousands gathered about him at times and seemed to hang with deathless interest upon his words of life and love, yet these same multitudes melted away from him as the morning star disappears from the sun. At his death he had a mere handful of followers, and they were half-hearted and discouraged.

During his life on earth Jesus did not leave a written word. He had no learning of the schools, and founded no colleges and universities. He built up no orphanages and established no benevolent associations. He built no church houses and planned no libraries. He left polygamy and slavery unscathed, and "the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile" was undisturbed. His ministry did not reach beyond the little land of Palestine.

How much greater have been the works of his disciples! A few days after Jesus' death they led thousands to obey him. Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria were made to acknowledge him as King. Then their work overleaped national lines, and in Paul's day the gospel had been preached in every nation. In three hundred years they overthrew the Roman empire.

And in these latter days what victories have been wrought! Millions of men and women have been converted to the Christian religion. Libraries have been filled with Christian thought. Thousands of printing presses are heralding the name of Jesus. Missionaries of the cross are in every land. Christian colleges and universities are emphasizing the words and life of Jesus. Slavery is doomed. Polygamy must go. While war has not ceased, it is stripped of much of its barbarity. Troubles between individuals and between nations are more and more being settled by the arbitrament of peace.

Measured by visible results, how much greater are the works of Jesus' followers than his own! And yet all the strength and influence of his people come from him who has gone to his Father. From his enthroned position he superintends the work.

Cruciferentes.

See Luke XXIII: 26.

The Orient sun shines hot upon the dusty way
As on to Calvary throngs the motley multitude:

Scribe, Pharisee, and priest, soldier and publican,

Gentile and Jew; and in their curious midst the Man

Of Sorrows walks beneath the heavy, torturing rood.

A week ago and o'er this self-same way

Amidst the plaudits of the press he passed

In state: before him branches green and flowers gay;

While all did shout, "Hosanna! David's son to-day

Doth come! Our King! Our King hath come at last!"

All changed. Curses for blessings now; for flowers, thorns;

Not David's son; not king. Nor rides he now in state,

But walks with faltering feet beneath the cruel load;

Now faints and falls to earth; they can no longer goad

His failing strength. That love should have its meed of hate!

Impatient of delay they lay the load on one

Who follows there with loving eye his Master's shame,

To bear it after him. Happy Cyrenian, thou,

To follow thus thy Lord and bear his cross! And now—

How proud we now, Oh, Lord, could we but do the same!

The little burdens thy love brings to us,

Help us to bear as patiently as then Simon did bear the cross. Help us to see These, too, are thine, and bear them for thy sake. Amen.

How It Strikes an Englishman

Impressions of Dr. W. T. Moore's
New Book.

By William Durban

I am enjoying a feast provided by one of the friends I know best on earth through long and close association almost daily in Christian work, and in constant companionship for over a dozen years during his residence in England. Dr. Moore has sent me a copy of his new book. It is certainly the greatest of his works in the literary line. In that last sentence I would emphasize the term "works" as well as the term "greatest." For my old master and beloved friend of youthful days, the late C. H. Spurgeon, in the preface to his beautiful little volume, "The Saint and his Savior," says that a man's writings may well be styled his "works," seeing that if they are of any value they must have cost him much toil. My friend, W. T. Moore, has really worked assiduously to produce such a book as this, "Man Preparing for Other Worlds." The hard work is not in the actual writing, for he can accomplish that process with the easy and graceful fluency with which he can talk, in common with so many of his race. Nor is the evidence of hard labor seen in the thinking out of the treatise, for my old friend is by nature a very original thinker, and his intellect works with admirable logical facility. I know W. T. M. so well! I know how he likes mathematics rather better of the two than classics; yet how he revels in reading the best poetry, and in fits of inspiration writes tender lyrics or stately blank verse in miniature epic effusions. I know that he prefers accurate ratiocination expressed in simple diction to spread-eagle rhetoric. Then, wherein does his latest work manifest the labor incurred? In this, that the many apt quotations from masters of religious, philosophic, and scientific thought, classified with great care and applied with extreme aptitude, demonstrate the fact that our author has read and studied immensely in the fields of literature bearing on his subject. I think that the first feeling of readers of "Man Preparing for Other Worlds," will be one of pleasure in going through chapter after chapter—led on by the easy and graceful style I have spoken of, and by the current of steady but swiftly flowing reasoning on the various positions assumed by thinkers, and convinced as the scheme unfolds that here is a new presentation of the greatest problem connected with the higher anthropology. But the next feeling of the reader will be that the book is of the greatest worth as a work of standard reference. It puts us in possession, in compact form, of what needs to be known by every student in the direction of the comparative philosophy of religion. And this is the very direction in which most young people leave colleges and universities befogged and bewildered. They are despairingly muddled between Darwin and Weismann, Flint and Le Conte, Dawson and Romanes, Emerson and Ruskin. Dr. Moore brings his authorities face to face with each other, and compels them to analyze each other's theories. Oh, how clearly this method exposes fallacy after fallacy.

Many Spoonfuls of Sunshine.

I have often wondered what Hartmann, Schopenhauer, and the other apostles of pessimism and despair would have said in a dialogue with Dr. Moore. He is the incarnation of optimism, and this book is an optimist classic. A little American girl one day sat on a rug with her cup of bread and milk. Suddenly, as a bright gleam glanced along her spoon with dazzling lustre, she exclaimed, "Oh, mother, I have swallowed a spoonful of sunshine!" I have swallowed many doses of solar essence while reading these pages. For in passage after passage the triumph of humanity over sin and sorrow, darkness and death, misery and mortality, self and Satan, hades and hell, is celebrated exultantly, while all the radiance of the prospect proceeds not from the writer's imagination, nor from any moonshiny reflection of the thoughts of men, however brilliant, but from the actual solar glory of the Christian system. The Sun of Righteousness, the Divine man Jesus Christ, is the supreme personality in view throughout.

Victorious Eschatology.

According to certain present day prophets both Anglican and American, everything is now on the verge of "the everlasting smash." Michael Baxter on my side of the Atlantic, and Lieut. Totten on yours, for instance, have been for some years fixing the dates of a dread assortment of horrors, not one of which in itself is incredible, but the reverse. But these hungry soothsayers do not like chronological expansionism. They give condensed terrors in tightly packed infernal machines. Baxter's original dates are all exhausted already, and this world has no business here at all, nor should his splendid business in Fleet street be booming as it is. I do not know where your Lieut. Totten may happen to be, but he must be worse disappointed than Jonah when that prophet was at his most peevish pitch. I allude to the matter because these vaticinators always have a new calendar on hand, and because hosts of credulous people are as ready to be invited to nightmare suppers as ever. It is refreshing to read any work which entertains respect for the proleptic portions of Holy Scripture, and yet puts on them a bright and encouraging interpretation with regard to the destiny of mankind. The climax of Brother Moore's book is contained in two chapters on "Man's Assurance of Victory," and on "Death and the Other Side." This portion of the book is magnificent. The writer has been showing in a chapter of forty-five beautiful pages, on "The Spiritual Man's Equipment for Service," that the gospel will ultimately triumph, but that this triumph will come about by a very great change in the attitude of Christian society, which will become adjusted to the spirit of Christ by assuming an heroic position scarcely even thought of in the great denominations and the churches as yet. Then we are treated to a masterly analysis of the reasons of suffering, and the benefits which have accrued to society after tragedies which for the moment stunned the communities, as when Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley fell under the dastardly attacks of assassins. These lives were broken just when they promised most, yet out of their deaths blossomed forth results far greater than might have been possible had the heroes run the usual political course.

The Evolutionary Continuity.

Dr. Moore gives an entirely new view of evolution, which I think admits of no dispute. I have been trying to see where it might be at fault, but have found no flaw. He has studied to splendid purpose all that is worth considering on evolutionism, and for this reason alone no student can afford to dispense with the book. It reviews both Darwin and the anti-Darwinians, and shows wherein both are partly right and partly wrong. Evolutionism is like Calvinism. Each is a gross distortion of a Bible truth. After examining Le Conte's definition of evolution, which is very generally accepted by theistic evolutionists, Dr. Moore amends and enlarges it and offers us what he thinks meets the demands of both science and scripture. Le Conte's definition is, "Evolution is progressive continuous change, according to certain laws and by means of resident forces." Here is Dr. Moore's: "Evolution is continuous progressive change, through certain fixed periods, according to certain laws, and by means of resident forces, which are supplied, put into operation, and controlled by an intelligent supernatural agent." I think that it must be conceded that this definition is what Brother Moore claims—comprehensive, if not exhaustive. My hope is that every student who reads this tribute to the book will hasten to secure it. It is just what is needed in relation to the foremost problems in contemporary thought.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

This is the commencement season. The mail is crowded with announcements and invitations, many of them gotten up in the finest style of the engraver's and printer's art. "I hate commencements," somebody says, "I never go to commencements." So much the worse for you. When you get so heartless and antique that you have no sympathy with young people and no cheer for the enthusiastic and hopeful soul just launching upon the serious voyage of life, you ought to be shelved and labeled and the cobwebs should be allowed to gather all over you. Get out to the poorest of them and clap your hands and cheer, and wish the youngsters "bon voyage," and congratulate them on their essays and speeches, and see how human and natural and helpful you can be, and pay a little of the debt you owe for such kindnesses shown when you made your debut, and thought you had the world in a sling, and exhorted your seniors in the same fashion to stand firm and do valiantly in the "battle of life." It is a great thing to observe the golden rule in these things, "Lest we forget; lest we forget."

Of course there is a deluge of advice let loose at this season. All sorts of spellbinders open the sluice gates of their pent-up oratory and fairly overwhelm the youth of the land; and the youth of the land, like the worm that turns, has also its opportunity to make some observations, not only on Greece and Rome, but on the obligations of society to the new actors that come upon the scene. Indeed it is a notable season every year, and one can judge pretty well how the world wags by reading the baccalaureates and other addresses reported for the month of roses. From the White House down we have had such sentiment this time. Here is our strenuous chief magistrate—he of the glasses and of the gleaming, self-asserting ivories—telling the students of Groton what sort of boys they should be—not mollicoddles or snobs, but genuine men. He thinks the American boy is in danger of becoming too ladylike in his tastes, preferring a book and a hammock to a gun, a saddle, or a pair of boxing gloves. He seems in harmony with the criticism of the Moseley commission which recently visited this country and made a study of our schools. The weak point, these English cousins discover, is that there is too much schoolmarm in our American system, and that as a result of their refining influences the American boy is becoming "feminized." The boys are under the direction of women from the kindergarten to the high school and not cultured in the use of the fist and the sterner discipline that produces manliness, and so a strange and indefinable feminine air is coming over

American men—a tendency toward a common or sexless tone of thought. Stuff! This is of a kind with some recent idiotic criticisms on the pulpit—that the preacher mingles in his pastoral relations with the women chiefly, and his sermons naturally become more feminine than masculine in their character, and this is why more men are not found in the churches! Mountains still labor and mice are born.

On the other hand, here is a class of commencement prophets who think the women are in peril of becoming masculinized. Sweet girl graduates, going forth to conquer, are warned gravely against this danger of our time. It is fair to say they are not thinking much about such mines and torpedoes planted by the enemy in the course their fair barks are taking. With their ribbons and muslins and blossoms and sweet-scented rolls of manuscript setting forth the most optimistic views of the untried future, they are willing to leave all such submarine mysteries to some gallant Dewey or Schley, some Togo or Yamanoto to look after, or like Dewa, the Jap, they may lure some rival's Petropavlovsk to explode them and clear the way. Yet here is the graduating class of Bryn Mawr, perhaps the foremost woman's college in America, advised to avoid the clubs, as they lead to "spiritual bankruptcy"! What is the matter with women's clubs? True, they are somewhat after the order of such organizations among men, though far more sensible and elevating as a rule, more practical and useful and free from the demoralizing associations that the masculine club is noted for. True, women in their little club-nests do not always agree, and are prone, they tell us, to throw bricks, and sometimes, it is said, object that the speaker on some theme is not gowned in harmony with the color-scheme of her thoughts, and so the club is not at peace. But we cannot see where the club woman is in danger of becoming a man—heaven forbid! Nor can we feel there is danger of spiritual decline if women thus take an active interest in literature, or politics, or municipal house-cleaning, or charity, or temperance reform, or patriotism. Give the women a chance. The sweet girl graduate, according to sad statistics, is about twenty-five years old on the average, and is pretty well able to take of herself. And if she thinks she can take care of a man also, it is possible that she is very nearly correct. Over five millions of the dear women of this country are taking care of men. We need not fear that there is the least danger of either feminizing our young men or masculinizing our young women. There are other and greater perils.

The Washington Christian College held its second commencement at the Vermont Avenue Christian church on the evening of June first. There were four graduates, two taking the B. S. and two the B. A. degree. The graduates were Misses Lena R. Saunders, Sara Cummings and Beatrice Grayson, and Mr. Claude C. Jones. Their addresses were most creditable. B. A. Abbott spoke to the class and Dr. Daniel E. Motley, the president, made a very practical and sensible address on education, some report of which appeared in the last CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and delivered the diplomas. The school has done good work the past year, and has enrolled about thirty students, all of whom were young people of excellent character and studious habits.

The work in our diocese grows constantly. The new house of worship at Vienna was opened Sunday, 12, J. Murray Taylor preaching the dedicatory sermon and E. B. Bagby, J. D. Hamaker, J. T. Watson and others sharing in the service. The property is worth three thousand dollars and is admirably located near the town of Vienna, Fairfax county, Va. The work was started here ten years ago by a few of our suburbanites, and Philemon Vawter preached here and died here in the harness. J. T. Watson is pastor, an admirable man.

We now have two churches in northern Virginia. J. Murray Taylor has done some preaching in our neighboring city of Alexandria, and organized there with eighteen souls. This ancient burg is just over the river, and has a population of 20,000. It is growing in importance, and with our new bridges across the Potomac, will be more closely identified with us. The little band starts out hopefully. They will probably purchase a chapel used formerly by the Presbyterians.

Our new house of worship in the southeast section of the city will soon be in process of construction. It is to cost about $5,000. The lot is paid for and the money partly raised for the building. W. L. Harris, we regret to say, has resigned at Whitney avenue. He is a good man and we are sorry to lose him. William C. Crierie has been made assistant pastor of the Ninth street church, and also preaches for our southeast mission. He is doing good work. Peter Ainslie and E. B. Bagby exchanged pulpits, Sunday, May 29. Bethany Beach will now be to the front. Write for Bethany Herald, Dr. H. J. Penrod, Ocean View, Del., and see program.

Wait not any longer
Thy work to begin;
By work we grow stronger.
Be steadfast and win.

—Thomas Hill.

Progress and Prophecy at Lake Mohonk

By Amos R. Wells

"I believe that the large portion of men would be glad to do away with war if they knew that most wars could be prevented." These words of Mr. Smiley, at the opening of the tenth Mohonk conference in the interest of international arbitration, are rapidly becoming justified by events.

Dr. Trueblood's review of the past year's progress showed wonderful progress for the principle—the Venezuela arbitration at the Hague, "the most remarkable lawsuit the world has seen"; the formation of an American group affiliated with the world's statesmen that make up the inter-parliamentary union for the promotion of arbitration; the settlement of the Alaskan boundary question; the great peace congress at Washington—these are only a few of the year's notable events that point toward peace.

"A 'fulness of time' seems to have arrived for the culmination of our reform," declared the chairman of the conference, the eminent jurist, Judge George Gray, of Delaware, head of the coal strike arbitration, and one of our four American judges at the Hague. "As a lake cannot be drawn from one point without lowering its level at all other points, so we are learning that the waste of war in one land injuriously affects all other lands."

Over and over that point was emphasized by the prominent business men attending the conference. As the Hon. S. B. Capen of the Boston merchants' association declared, "The war going on in the far east is paralyzing America. The waste of war is the waste of the common assets of the world."

Sixteen of the leading chambers of commerce and boards of trade, of the largest cities in the country, were represented by delegates in the conference. Thirty-seven of these powerful bodies have placed themselves on record as unqualifiedly in favor of international arbitration. Many groups of merchants are as determined as those in Boston, who have formed a committee of one hundred, the chairman being the Hon. Richard Olney, and one of the vice-chairmen being ex-secretary John D. Long, whose active purpose is to arouse the business men of New England to agitate for the reform. As Prof. John H. Gray of the Northwestern university declared, "When the business interests of the nation express a wish for international arbitration, our lawmakers will suddenly discover that they were always in favor of the measure."

"From a business point of view," said Mr. Arthur B. Faraquar, of the national association of manufacturers, "a worse investment than a modern warship would be hard to find." "The growth of our commerce is such," said Secretary Preston, of the Boston chamber of commerce, "that we can't afford to go to war, or have other nations go to war." Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Baltimore, and other large cities made similar emphatic expressions of opinion. The cause is rapidly winning, as Edward Everett Hale said, "the influence of the men who know how to cash a check, and can tell the difference between a special delivery stamp and the other kind."

Though business men were thus prominent in the conference, all present were idealists—practical idealists. Indeed, as Commissioner Macfarland expressed it, "already the dream of the poet has become the plan of the statesman." The nations, as Dr. Leipziger of New York city urged, are coming to see that it is ideas, not size or numbers or armies, that make a land great. "England and France never so certainly showed themselves to be first-class nations as when they recently made their arbitration treaty with each other." "The tribesman of old," Prof. John Bassett Moore reminded us, "would have considered feudalism the dream of a theorist. The feudal chief would have thought the prophecy of our present civil states to be a mere dream. So we may think of our visions of international organization; but the future will speedily realize them."

Many representatives of the army and navy took active part in the conference, such men as Major General O. O. Howard, Gen. C. H. Howard, Gen. James H. Wilson, Gen. James Grant Wilson and Lieutenant Richard P. Hobson. As Gen. Horatio C. King asserted, "No one is so desirous of peace as the soldier, who understands what war means." The conference wisely refrained from expressing any opinion regarding the wisdom of our large naval increase, but looked forward hopefully to the time when, in addition to an international court of justice, we shall have both an international congress and an international police force that will render possible the gradual disarmament of the nations.

This tenth Mohonk conference was the largest ever held, consisting of some three hundred delegates, entertained by Mr. Smiley's lavish hospitality in one of the loveliest spots on earth. The merest mention of the many distinguished speakers and delegates is out of the question. There were many eminent jurists, among them being Justice David J. Brewer of the Supreme Court of the United States, who, while he eloquently expressed his sure faith in the coming of universal arbitration, yet would have us "remember that movements as vast, and changing the face of the world as international arbitration, do not come in a day." There were many eminent educators and many well known literary men. Partisan allusions to the Russo-Japanese war were ruled out, but a strong plea for international justice was made by Baron Kentaro Kaneko.

As never before, the cause of international arbitration has back of it the force of public opinion. Its friends will seek in every wise way to intensify that opinion. The immediate duty is to urge our government to negotiate, with Great Britain and all other countries, strong arbitration treaties. The President and Secretary Hay are ready to make such treaties if the senate will ratify them, and the senate will ratify them if the people want them. The people have spoken through this latest Mohonk conference with a voice whose urgency cannot be mistaken. Through the coming twelve-month that voice will rise into a demand that no one can resist, and that our national leaders will gladly and promptly heed.

WISE WORDS

A Physician on Food.

A physician of Portland, Oregon, has views about food. He says:

"I have always believed that the duty of the physician does not cease with treating the sick, but that we owe it to humanity to teach them how to protect their health, especially by hygienic and dietetic laws."

"With such a feeling as to my duty, I take great pleasure in saying to the public that, in my own experience, and also from personal observation, I have found no food to equal Grape-Nuts, and that I find there is almost no limit to the great benefit this food will bring when used in all cases of sickness and convalescence."

"It is my experience that no physical condition forbids the use of Grape-Nuts. To persons in health there is nothing so nourishing and acceptable to the stomach, especially at breakfast, to start the machinery of the human system on the day's work. In cases of indigestion, I know that a complete breakfast can be made of Grape-Nuts and cream, and I think it is necessary not to overload the stomach at the morning meal. I also know the great value of Grape-Nuts when the stomach is too weak to digest other food."

"This is written after an experience of more than 20 years' treating all manner of chronic and acute diseases, and the letter is written voluntarily on my part without any request for it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Search for the Pearl of Great Price

An address at the opening of the Christian Church World's Fair Building, St. Louis, Mo., June 11.

By Z. T. Sweeney

It is but natural upon such an occasion that our minds should be directed to the intimate relation between Christianity and universal progress. The first international exposition ever held upon this earth was in London, in the year 1851, and was under the direct patronage of his royal highness, the prince consort to Queen Victoria, who was president of the Society of Arts, which society conducted the exposition. It was held in the first building made of glass and iron by the hand of man, which was the beginning of a number of such buildings called "crystal palaces." The second one was held in New York city, two years later, which also had a crystal palace, and which was destroyed by fire shortly after the exposition closed. These were very rude and simple beginnings, but they were beginnings. Our New York exposition covered less than five acres of ground, and could have been placed, entire, in almost any of the great buildings of this exposition. Other nations have followed, and the culmination of it all is in the stupendous sight that greets our eyes to-day, by far the greatest exposition ever held on the earth, but, in my judgment, by no means greater than others which shall follow.

Previous to 1851 there had been national expositions, notably among the French people, and their advanced position in the fine arts and sciences is largely due to their patronage of these expositions. Previous to the national expositions, there had been fairs and bazaars for many centuries. The difference between a fair and an exposition is that the first is the result of scant communication. They were intended to be the medium of interchange of values, and the fiscal interest was the prominent one. The second is the result of extended communication, and is for the interchange of ideas and thoughts, and the fiscal interest is entirely secondary.

This leads our minds to consider the prospective results of such expositions, because the results are largely prospective at present. Valuable as they may be in the present, they are far more valuable in their prospective results.

First: The stimulus that comes from universal competition. Man has always acted under the whip and spur of competition. From the time he competes as a schoolboy for a prize, up to the end of life, he is spurred on by the desire of mastery over others, and these expositions stimulate this competition in no small degree. As a single illustration of this principle, take the Swiss people. For centuries they had gone on in the old way of manufacturing watches by hand labor, and felt that it was the only way to make them. When their commission visited the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia, they were astonished at our display of machine-made watches. They went to Waltham, Mass., and bought, in one of the stores, the cheapest American-made watch; they took it to pieces to criticize and find fault, but they were astonished at its remarkable accuracy and efficiency in keeping time. When they returned to Switzerland they informed their government that the Swiss people must either adopt American machinery and methods, or be forced out of the watch-making business. Instances like this can be multiplied by the hundred and thousand in such an exposition as this.

Second: The Lesson of International Dependence. Every nation is indebted to others to a far greater degree than it supposes. The brotherhood of man is no more a fact than the brotherhood of nations. A hundred years ago the nations of earth were walled in by prejudice, ignorance and political bigotry. Revolutions might take place upon one part of the earth and never be heard of among other nations. To-day there are no hermit nations. The advancing flood of civilization has overflowed national walls and formed one universal brotherhood of nations. No great wave of political or moral excitement can be started in any quarter of this earth that will not at last break into froth and foam against the shaggy sides of every other nation in the world.

Third: The Influence upon the Individual. What person could visit such an exposition as this without being far richer and nobler in all his after life? The little boy who comes from his mountain home and stands in this great display of the world's literature, science and art, will have a spell of everlasting culture thrown over him by the visit. A heart-sick and weary wife and mother, tired with bearing hard and uncongenial burdens, will walk through these picture halls and buildings and go back to her tasks braver and better and with a larger cultivation by her association

HAS TRIED BOTH

Travel for Health vs. Dieting.

A man who was sent to Europe for his health and finally found cure in a little change in his diet says:

"I was troubled with dyspepsia for five years, and two doctors here in Kenosha that treated me for over a year both told me there was no help for me. Then I had an expert from Chicago, but still received no relief; then followed another expert from Chicago who came to our house two times a month for four months. He gave me up like all the others, and told me to take a trip across the ocean, which I did in the year 1899, and came home about as bad as when I started. The doctors told me my stomach lining was full of sores. Then I began to study my own case and learned of the diet recommended by the Postum Cereal Co. So I gave up coffee, pork and all greasy foods, and began using Postum Food Coffee. Gradually I got better and better, until I am well now as I ever was in my younger days, have no trouble and eat anything fit to eat.

"Sometimes away from home I am persuaded to drink coffee, but I only take a sip of it, for it tastes bitter and disagreeable to me, but the longer I use Postum the better I like it and the better I feel. I could say a great deal more of my experience with Postum, but think this will give everyone a good idea of what leaving off coffee and using Postum can do." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SECOND QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The lessons of the past quarter have dealt with incidents in the life of Jesus during the latter half of his public ministry. The following outline of the life of Jesus may be of service in showing the relation of these incidents to each other and to the whole course of his ministry:

- I. Annunciations, birth and infancy.
- II. Thirty years of private life.
  1. Visit to Jerusalem.
  2. Life at Nazareth.
- III. Introduction to ministry.
  1. Preaching of John the Baptist.
  2. Baptism of Jesus.
  3. The Temptation.
- IV. Early Judean ministry.
  1. Cleansing the temple.
  2. Nicodemus.
- V. Galilean ministry, first period,
until the calling of the twelve.
- VI. Galilean ministry, second period, from calling of the twelve until the retirement into the north.
(Here begin the lessons of this quarter.)
- VII. Galilean ministry, third period, from retirement into the north until the last departure for Jerusalem.
  1. Journey to Tyre and Sidon.
  2. Peter's confession.
  3. The transfiguration.
- VIII. The Perea ministry,
from the last departure from Galilee until the final arrival in Jerusalem.
  1. The mission of the seventy.
  2. Increasing friction with the Pharisees.
  3. Many parables and discourses:
teaching about prayer; the coming kingdom; the prodigal son; humility; predictions of death; Mary, Martha and Lazarus.
- IX. Passion week.
  1. Triumphal entry.
  2. Cleansing the temple.
  3. A day of parables and discourses.
  4. The passover.
  5. Betrayal, trial, crucifixion, burial.
- X. Victory.
  1. Resurrection.
  2. Appearance to disciples and others.
  3. Ascension.

During the part of his ministry which is covered by the lessons of this quarter, Jesus devoted most of his time to the instruction of those who should be his messengers and heralds, to proclaim his gospel after he had finished his earthly work. The object in view was twofold: first, the culture of their own spiritual lives for their own sakes; second, the increase of their effectiveness as ministers of his word. The same two objects should be held in view by those who study the words and life of Jesus now.

What were the lessons which Jesus most emphasized in teaching his disciples? These are some of them:

1. Faith. Peter's confession of his faith in Jesus as the divine Messiah and Saviour is declared to be a rock-bottom truth which is indispensable to the kingdom. It is equally necessary in the spiritual growth of the individual. Upon this rock of faith is built the structure of all enduring life, whether individual or institutional.

2. Service. Jesus sent out the seventy to minister to the needs of men. He wished them to understand clearly that their religion must not exhaust itself in saving themselves, but must make them missionaries. This is the keynote of Christianity. In teaching humility he was teaching also the lesson of service.

3. Prayer. The power for service comes through prayer. Only by keeping in close touch with the divine life can man have the strength and wisdom to work the works of God.

4. Love. The origin of Christianity is in the love of God; its progress must be through the love of man for man. The parable of the prodigal son shows how God is trying to love back his erring children into righteousness. The sufferings and death of Jesus were the world's greatest lesson in love.

5. Certainty of victory. It was expedient that some indubitable assurance be given that love would prevail, that the seeking of the spiritual things could not end in permanent defeat. The resurrection of Jesus was the world's standing proof of the victory which awaits the men and movements who are on the side of God. Sacrifices may be called for, but it is not a losing fight or a forlorn hope. "This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith."

SIGNS THAT INDIA IS BECOMING CHRIST'S.—Ps. 22:22-31.

For the Leader.

The psalm that we have for a scripture lesson this evening is a very appropriate one as a basis for a missionary meeting. No doubt, the people of the church are more thoroughly aroused than at any time since the apostolic period of missions. The young people are essentially missionary. It is a part of youth to expand. The young people of the church should thank the Lord that they have come upon the field of Christian effort at such a time as this. It is an old story—and yet it has not been long since it was first told—that the ends of the earth are ready for the gospel. We mean by this that the preliminaries to successful missionary work, such as treaties between nations, a regard for the subjects of a foreign government, the tying together of the nations by the means of communication and travel, the translation of the gospel into foreign tongues, the survey and tentative occupation of nearly every mission field by bands of workers who have established schools, and have in other ways made themselves useful to the people that sit in spiritual darkness—these things have brought the church to the open door of a great and rapid advance. Among the fields white for the harvest is India.

For the Members.

1. The Christian church is represented upon the field of India by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Both have orphanages and hospitals in addition to the gospel work. The property of these two societies has grown within a generation to be quite large. A new undertaking is to be a Bible college for the training of native workers. This is under the Foreign Society. Bro. Wharton, the first foreign missionary of the Foreign Society to India, is preparing to return to India to take charge of this work. The C. W. B. M. has inaugurated a work in Calcutta, the great student center of the Orient. It is Bible chair work. Bro. Forrest, who had charge of this work, and who delighted the great convention at Detroit, was compelled, on account of illness in the family, to return to the states. It is understood that a man will be placed in this important field soon. The work that has enlisted the sympathy of the Endeavorers is the orphanage at Damoh, India. Over three hundred societies have supported, each, an orphan there, and provided for his education. The cost this year is $18.00. Think of what this will mean to the cause of the Master in India within the next generation!

2. The mission work of other Protestant bodies in India has long been established. The results, after long and patient labor, have been very gratifying. The Baptists have had a most wonderful work there. At times they have had more applicants for baptism than they had teachers to properly instruct. Pentecostal success has crowned their efforts. The Methodists in the north part of India made 20,000 converts in seven years. In another district the Christian population increased 14,000 in ten years. The last census reports of all India showed an increase in the Christian population of 600,000 persons. There is a society of Christian Endeavor in Ahmednagar, India, which has the second largest membership of any society in the world. It has five divisions, and has a membership of nearly 500. It conducts five or six Sunday-schools in different parts of the city, and has charge of street preaching in several parts of the city on Sunday afternoons.

3. These are signs that light is breaking in India. We rejoice in the pleasing prospect. India is a strange land. It is the land of extremes. Romance has found a field here for the most bewitching stories. The rich are here in more than fairy splendor. The poor fill the land in indescribable squalor. It is the land of contemplative philosophy. Vice is rampant, and yet it is the land of monks. Widowhood is the despair of young women. Famine, poverty, caste, starving children, lepers, beggars, lords, ladies, palaces. But the light of the Lord of lords, and the power of the King of kings, is now upon the land. Let us praise God for the promise which draws near in India.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I praying daily for the men and the women who are carrying the banner of the Lord in that far away land?

LABORERS AND REWARDS.

"Go ye also into the vineyard and whatsoever is right I will give you."—Matt. 20:4. (Read Matt. 20:1-16.)

This parable of the householder recorded in the chapter and verses above cited, like all the other parables of the Master, is designed to teach one particular lesson, other features being incidental to that. This parable seems to us to teach the lesson that men are to be rewarded according to their opportunities of service if they have been faithful to these opportunities. Some of these laborers went out in the early morning, others at nine o'clock, others at noon, and still others at five o'clock in the afternoon, but it appears that they each went to work as soon as the opportunity was offered. Therefore they received the same wages. This is not the way the world rewards its laborers, but it is the Lord's way of remunerating those who serve him.

The Householder. Our Lord is the householder who is meant in this passage, who has a great work to perform in the world to bring it under the dominion of truth and righteousness. It is the most stupendous enterprise of which the human mind can conceive. It is his plan to accomplish this great undertaking through human agencies. He has, therefore, called men into fellowship with himself as co-laborers in this great enterprise.

The Call. The gospel of Christ is his call to men to enlist in his service and become co-workers with him in the harvest of the world. This invitation was first extended to the Jews, and later to the Gentiles. Perhaps the primary aim of the parable was to show that the Gentiles, who were later in entering into the service of God, because they had not hitherto heard the gospel message, were to be rewarded equally with those who had received the invitation earlier. But the principle is of universal application. The call is universal in that it applies to all men who will hear it, for God is no respecter of persons.

The Laborers. All who respond to the call of the gospel, turn away from their sins and enter the service of Christ, are the laborers in his vineyard. There are not supposed to be any idlers. We enlist in the service of Christ, or in other words, enter into his church, to become workers with him in accomplishing the purpose for which the church was established. If we are not laboring in this cause, if we are not doing something to hasten the triumph of Christ's kingdom in the world, our profession is false and we are not truly disciples of Christ. It becomes each one of us to ask himself the question, "Am I a laborer in the Master's vineyard?" Some people go into the vineyard simply to eat the grapes, but the Master calls us to service.

The Reward. This is not all in the future. The Master pays in part as we do the work. The joy of Christian service and of Christian fellowship is itself large remuneration for whatever sacrifice of time or means or strength may be involved. There is a gradual spiritual growth, a development of the higher and better nature, resulting from this service, that is beyond all computation. And then, to crown it all, there is the everlasting inheritance of the saints in light—the final goal of all our struggles and conflicts, the perfection of character, amid the fadeless joys and satisfactions of the eternal home.

The Lesson. The parable does not teach that we may safely postpone our acceptance of this call of the Master to enter his service. It only teaches that if our opportunities have not been as great as those of others, and if we have used wisely the opportunities which have come to us, we are to be equally rewarded with those who have been more highly favored. We are not to envy those who we think have greater opportunities for doing good than ourselves. We are simply to be faithful, to use such opportunities as are ours to the best advantage, in order to secure our just reward. "Whatsoever is right, I will give thee."

Prayer. Oh, Lord, we thank thee that thou hast called us by thy gospel into fellowship with Thyself to become co-workers with thee in the world's redemption. If we have responded to this call, help us to be faithful in the use of our opportunities, not being idlers but laborers in Thy vineyard, that we may at last hear Thy welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" And this we ask for Thy name's sake. Amen.

Our Budget

—"We doubled our apportionment for children's day."—D. D. T., Crawford, Mo.

—The congregation at Marshalltown, Iowa, is making preparation for a meeting to begin July 1.

—Last week the Foreign Society received $500 on the annuity plan from a friend in Canada.

—The church at Paola, Kan., is already extending a hearty invitation to the state convention which meets there July 25-28.

—E. E. Faris and wife are expected to leave their work in Africa for a season and be in the homeland in October or November.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the best paper that comes to my desk.—BERT WILLIAM SALMON, minister.

Coggon, Iowa.

—O. P. Spiegel, of Birmingham, Ala., was complimented highly by the secular press for his commencement sermon preached at West Point, Ga.

—The Christian Courier is calling aloud for some Texas church to take possession of Crayton S. Brooks. But Missouri has claims and needs still.

—The Christian church at Gilmore City, Iowa, was utilized for Decoration day memorial services as well as for the commencement day of the public schools.

—Austin Hunter, of Indianapolis, was chosen to deliver the commencement address at Oakland street college and at the high school, Huntingburg, Ind.

—The church building at Wills Point, Tex., has recently been renovated. There is a splendid membership, and their pulpit will doubtless soon be supplied.

—Jas. T. Nichols, pastor at Vinton, Ia. is a World's Fair visitor this week and paid the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a pleasant call. Brother Nichols is just starting on an oriental trip.

—For the first three days following children's day, 272 schools responded, with offerings amounting to $3,834, a gain of 100 schools and $1,288 over the corresponding time last year.

—Wm. H. Erskine, of Pittsburg, Pa., has just been appointed a missionary of the Foreign Society to Akita, Japan. He will sail September 21 on the S. S. "Korea" from San Francisco.

—C. E. Wells, who has accepted a call from the church at Keota, Ia., continues to be addressed at Cherokee. He has already moved to his new field of work and correspondents should note the fact.

We regret to learn that the wife of Prof. D. R. Dungan, of Christian university, Canton, Mo., is very seriously ill. We can but express our sincere sympathy and our earnest hope that she may recover.

—The new church at Indiana Harbor is in need of a supply of song books. If any church or individual will donate or sell at a reasonable figure, they may communicate with Bro. A. Martin, Indiana Harbor, Ind.

—Cephas Shelburne is having fine audiences at Huntington, Ind. At the evening services chairs in the aisles are frequently needed to accommodate the people. Four new additions to the church are reported.

—Marshfield, Mo., has raised the money to send their pastor, F. M. Hooten, to Carrollton. Are there not many other churches that will do this for the preacher who cannot, without inconvenience, take these little trips?

—The Hon. Wm. H. Wallace, of the Kansas City bar, delivered his famous lecture on "Jesus of Nazareth as a Man" for the Christian church at Warsaw, Mo. This lecture was much appreciated by pastor and people.

—Mrs. Dora Crabb, a member of the church at Danville, Ind., has presented to the congregation an individual communion service. Last month a new pipe organ was dedicated. The church has just made a second increase in salary to its pastor, E. F. Daugherty.

—Dr. Louis A. Banks, of New York city, has been at the head of the anti-saloon league temperance campaign during the past two weeks in Buffalo, N. Y. Bro. B. S. Ferrall reports that about 2,000 people have signed Lincoln's pledge.

—The largest offering that we have yet heard from on children's day was raised by the St. Joseph, Mo., church, of which James M. Irwine is superintendent. The amount was nearly $800. This is a great offering and we all rejoice in it.

—The Maryville, Mo., church raised over $175 at its children's day collection. It will be remembered that its Easter offering to the orphans' home was a large one, being $276. H. A. Denton begins his work with this church next Lord's day.

—The degree of A. M. has been granted by the University of Wisconsin to Rolla G. Sears. During the year he held the "Hebrew prize scholarship" for excellence in Hebrew. Brother Sears taught in that department the second half of the year.

—A good meeting has just been held at Pembroke, Va., and a bright future appears to be before our church, which is the best in the town. A new railroad promises a growth to the town and our church is in a position to meet the increased responsibility.

—Bro. Jos. Gaylor writes that N. S. Campbell is leading Carterville to victory. He preached the memorial sermon of the Grand Army, and thus acquired a great influence over the old soldiers. His church is enjoying unprecedented success in every way.

—H. M. Bandy, Albuquerque, N. M., reports that the ladies of the church there gave a reception for himself and wife. Brother Bandy expresses the hope that the mutual esteem may increase as time rolls on. He reports one addition to the church by letter.

—For the first eight months of the current missionary year, the Foreign Society received $64,885 from the churches as churches for foreign missions, a gain over the corresponding eight months last year of $5,329. There has also been a gain of 124 contributing churches.

—"The best house of worship in the place" has just been dedicated at Ripley, Iowa, by L. L. Carpenter. Everything conspired to make the occasion a happy one. The brethren pledged themselves to pay every dollar. Bro. Cory, pastor of the church at Mt. Sterling, was present and rendered very valuable assistance.

—Just as we go to press the papers announce the supreme court decision in three of the boodle cases. The cases of Julius Lehmann and Hartman were affirmed—the sentences being confinement in the penitentiary, the first for seven and the latter for six years. The case of R. M. Snyder was reversed, and he is free.

—I wish I could tell you how much good the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST does me. I pass it on. I like the spirit and style of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST better than any of our religious papers. It helps me in proving many a point in this new country.—MRS. EMERY A. GREEN.

Prior Creek, I. T.

—N. G. Buckley, pastor of the Wallace street Christian church, Chicago, reports the eighth anniversary of that church as a very successful one, every dollar of the debt remaining upon it being provided for. The membership is now three times as great as it was when the present pastor took the church nineteen months ago.

—I have just finished reading the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I want to thank you for it. If our other papers would get out such an issue, our coming convention would be thoroughly advertised in almost every home among us. I used to think that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was as good as it could be made, but somehow you seem to have inexhaustible resources, for it seems to get better all of the time. Again thanking you for the special number. I am, your brother in the work—F. M. CALVIN, 2800 Vincent St., St. Louis.

—The Fifth avenue church of Grand Rapids, Mich., has won W. A. Bellamy from Evansville, Ind. Bro. Bellamy took charge of the Bethany Christian church of Evansville five years ago, being its first pastor and the church his first church. There were 326 additions during his ministry. Grand Rapids, to which he will now remove, is his native town.

—George W. Mullins has been ordained to the work of the Christian ministry by S. B. Moore, of Atlanta. Bro. Moore was assisted by W. H. Chastain and W. J. Cooke. Bro. Williams is in charge of the work at Howell Station. He is connected with the Southern Express Co., and hopes at an early date to give all his time to the ministry of the word.

—The Christian hospital, St. Louis, Mo., has a vacancy now for a few more nurses to take the course of training, and young ladies between the ages of 18 and 30 years, sound in mind, body and morals, with a grammar school education, desiring such a position, can secure further information by writing to Mrs. O. C. Shedd, 4011 Pine street, St. Louis.

—W. H. Smith, of Tiffin, Ohio, has resigned, to take effect in three months' time. Mrs. Robert Miller, the church secretary, writes that he is held in high respect by all church members as well as by the citizens, and the resignation is much lamented. Bro. Smith has now an opportunity to pursue his studies, and he feels it due to himself to take advantage of it.

—More and more effort is being made by the churches to reach people during the hot season. A number of philanthropic citizens of Fort Worth, Texas, are considering the project of having a people's pavilion for summer Sunday evening religious services. The idea is to reach the non-church-goers, and Bro. James E. Myers has been asked to lead the work.

—J. N. Scholes has resigned the pastorate of the Island Christian church, Wheeling, W. Va., his resignation being made necessary through the failing health of Mrs. Scholes. He will leave the Island work shortly after the vacation season and will begin evangelistic work. Churches desiring meetings during the autumn and winter may write him at 178 Zane St., Wheeling, W. Va.

—Dr. Younge and wife, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., paid us a pleasant visit last week while in our city visiting the fair. They have recently returned from a tour to the Holy Land, whither they went with the delegates to the World's Sunday-school convention. The doctor is much impressed with the value of a visit to Bible lands by all who are engaged in teaching the Bible. He feels well repaid for the trip.

—Plans and specifications for a new church building for the Highland street church of Christ, Worcester, Mass., are now being made. A loan has been negotiated and the building will be erected this summer. The church lot was purchased last August at a cost of $4,500, the final payment having been made in May last. Open air services are being held every Sunday afternoon, the weather permitting, near the church.

—The church at Athena, Ore., of which J. W. Jenkins is pastor, has entered upon a new period in its history. It is the first church in Oregon to become a living link church and in co-operation with the home board, an able man will be secured and New Testament Christianity will be planted in one of the enterprising and growing towns of eastern Oregon. The great and growing northwest is open for us. We must not miss our opportunities.

—The following note of introduction has been received: "I wish to introduce to the brethren Mr. Le Roy St. John as a superior singing evangelist. He has but recently united with the Christian church, and is giving himself wholly to evangelistic singing. Added to his charming Christian life, he has a highly cultivated voice which he uses with rare effect both in solo singing and in chorus work. Evangelists and pastors will do well to correspond with him. He may be addressed, Mr. Le Roy St. John, Terre Haute, Ind."

L. E. SELLERS.

Terre Haute, Ind.

—At the close of his lecture in Melbourne, the students presented Wren J. Grinstead with a watch charm made of Australian gold and shaped like a map of the commonwealth of Australia. Mrs. Grinstead was presented at the farewell social at the Lygon street church with a brooch of Australian opals and pearls. Bro. Grinstead was to have six weeks of work in New South Wales before he sailed for America. He reports that many Australian boys are coming to America to study for the ministry.

—A. R. Teachout, a member of the Franklin Circle Church, Cleveland, Ohio, recently sent $1,000 to the Church Extension Fund. Brother Teachout in remitting stated that a recent tour which he made throughout the new Northwest convinced him of the need of a large Church Extension Fund in order to establish our churches in the rapidly growing center of the West. He is a son of Abram Teachout, one of the pioneers of our work in Ohio. Abram Teachout and this son, A. R. Teachout, were two of the first to contribute $500 each to the Church Extension Fund when it was started.

—The forty-ninth annual commencement of Butler college begins to-morrow, June 17, when the final chapel exercises and the concert by the school of music will take place. On Sunday the baccalaureate address will be given by the president of the college, and on Tuesday the president's reception will be held. Wednesday is class day, and for it are scheduled the basket dinner and alumni reunion, the play, Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," interclass Canendi Certamen, and the alumni banquet. On Thursday, the address will be delivered by Pres. Robert E. Hieronymus, of Eureka college.

—W. S. Bullard, pastor of the church at Texarkana, Tex. and Ark., paid our office a visit while in the city during the past week. They have a great church enterprise on hand in Texarkana in the form of a $20,000 church, which has so far progressed that the Sunday-school part is being used. Bro. Bullard is seeking sufficient help from brethren abroad to reduce the debt to a point where a $5,000 loan from the board of church extension will cover the entire deficit. Bro. Bullard is an earnest worker, a consecrated man and an efficient preacher of the gospel. We commend his mission to the brethren whom he may visit.

—C. E. Randall, who has felt compelled to resign pastoral work at Duke street, Kingston, Jamaica, has just been the recipient of a delightful address from the church and a souvenir in the shape of a lounge chair and leather brief bag. The C. E. society, "in affectionate remembrance of his twelve years service as president," presented him with an illuminated framed design, surrounded by photographs of himself as the organizer of the first C. E. society in Jamaica, and Dr. Francis Clark, the originator of the movement. During Bro. Randall's pastorate, some 300 members were received into the fellowship of the church.

—In sending us local papers from Mobile reporting the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, Bro. Claude E. Hill writes: "The commissioners from the border states, Missouri and Kentucky, led the fight for the appointment of the committee, while the extreme Southern opposed. The sessions were full of interest, but sometimes painfully slow. Conservatism was characteristic of the meeting, and it never reached the point of general enthusiasm as compared with one of our conventions. The array of talent was up to my expectation. They had some brilliant men here. It was conceded by most that this assembly marked the beginning of a new era for the church." (See editorial elsewhere.)

—A note from W. J. Lhamon, dean of the Bible college, Columbia, Mo., says that Bro. C. M. Sharpe reports $2,000 added to the productive endowment of that institution. The school should have an endowment, very soon, of $100,000 to enable it to do the work that ought to be done at that place. We know of no other location where there is the same opportunity of reaching the educated young people of the whole state with biblical teaching and with the transforming power of the gospel, as in our Missouri Bible college, contiguous to the State university with all the advantages which it offers. We call the attention of our men of wealth in the state to this opportunity as worthy of their investigation.

—B. B. Tyler is again "on the move." He has just taken a flying trip to Chicago, officiating at a marriage service and returning to occupy his Denver pulpit on the Lord's day. He will attend the Colorado state Sunday-school convention, which is meeting this week. Next week he is to go to Monte Vista, Col., to make two people one and to preach three times. From here he will take a flying trip to Buffalo, N. Y., where the International Sunday-school lesson committee meets on June 29. After these little excursions he will be at home until he comes to the general convention in October. Bro. Tyler continues to have additions to his church, the last report being five added to the roll, while seven were baptized by him on the 1st of June.

—What a small church in a little western town can do is seen by the contribution of $100 by the Christian church at Langdon, Kan. The membership is only 120, but the fact that the Sunday-school enrollment is 107 and that it includes a very large number of the church membership shows the spirit which is at the back of the missionary offering. The young men's class gave over $45, and the young ladies did their duty also. The church is rejoicing in its own good works and the cause it helps to promote. As these contributions are three times as much as the church has ever given foreign missions before, we do not wonder that Bro. C. W. Van Dolah, who gives but half time to this congregation, is happy. May other churches be inspired to go and do likewise!

—Bro. T. R. Hodkinson, of Sloan, Ia., has been filling the pulpit of the M. E. church and his own, alternately, during the vacation of the M. E. pastor, and expects the latter to fill the two pulpits alternately during his month off. The local paper, commenting upon the arrangement, and complimenting Bro. Hodkinson on his sermons, says: "It has been an object-lesson rebuking the pettiness of sectarian bigotry; and a demonstration that, without the sacrifice of principle, the followers of Christ, of different denominations, may unite on common ground. But the chief value of such fraternization looks toward the future. Whenever it may be proper for either congregation to advocate its distinctive plea, it is increasingly probable that such advocacy will be controlled by Christian feeling rather than by partisan zeal."

—"I write to correct an impression that may have been made by a correspondent's note in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am not going to California. Imperishable friendships, fruits and flowers have tempted me at times, but I shall remain at Des Moines and continue in the evangelistic field. My next two meetings will be in Missouri. On my return from the coast two years ago, I held a meeting at Platte City, and since that meeting Missouri has employed more than half my time. And what a pleasure it has been! Not one cold, inhospitable church or disgruntled, jealous preacher have I found. And the result has been a heart-warming, soul-saving, reconsecrating experience in every meeting. I can give dates for two or three more meetings the coming season, and should prefer to hold them in Missouri or Iowa."—B. B. BURTON, 1109 Twenty-sixth St., Des Moines, Iowa.

—W. L. McIlvaine gives a report of how one can go in and possess the land sometimes. He went to Irrigon, Ore., on April 9, an entire stranger to everyone there except three persons to whom he had preached at Farmington, Wash. He arrived at a most opportune time. A land and water company there had made certain provisions by which the first church represented in the field was to receive two lots and $200, and the next two churches to receive two lots and $150 each. A Presbyterian minister had been there first, preached, selected his building site and gone away. Bro. McIlvaine came, preached, selected a site, but stayed. The result is he has two good lots graded, foundation stone hauled, over $700 pledged, more than half of which is at once available, and the lumber ordered for a Christian church. That shows the difference between going away and staying.

—The Disciples of Christ in northern Idaho formed themselves a few years ago into a missionary co-operative society for the spreading of the gospel and the establishment in the above territory of churches of the New Testament order. As a result, churches have been planted in many places. The yearly camp meetings of our church in this state have already attracted attention. This year the brethren and sisters will gather at Culesac from June 16 to 26. An excellent program has been prepared. Evangelist M. W. Smith will preach each evening and Frank McCauley will sing. Some of the subjects for discussion are, "Biblical Criticism; Its Present Status and Our Attitude toward It," "Can We as a People Federate with Other Churches? If So, to What Degree?" "How Should Christians Observe the Lord's Day in Regard to Amusements?" Other subjects with which our people are especially familiar will also be brought into discussion.

—The missionary study class at Cotner university this year gave a commencement program. In the opening exercises the mission students marched in and filled the front of the chapel. The address of the occasion was by Prof. H. T. Sutton and his theme "The Measure of the Christian's Consecration." We understand that the mission leaders at Cotner plan to make this one of the prominent features of commencement week. There is no question but that mission study deserves a place. Education with the Christian and the missionary part of it left out is not what we are specially seeking to promote. It is Christian education with the true missionary ring that we all desire to advance in our institutes of learning. The knowledge of missions will materially help the spreading of the gospel and to put mission study upon the plane occupied by recognized college subjects will do very much to inspire students with missionary enthusiasm. The Cotner idea is a good one. Bro. Elmer R. Child writes us that the cry there is, "A hundred or more in mission study in 1904-5." More than half that number has already been enrolled.

—The Editor of this paper spent last Lord's day with Drake University and the University Place church, listening to an inspiring sermon in the morning by the pastor of the church, Chas. S. Medbury, delivered to a large audience. Frank Garrett and wife were present, Brother Garrett offering the opening prayer. Miss Clawson, another missionary, was also present, arriving with us on a delayed train, just in time for the service, and leading in prayer after the announcement by the pastor of the raising of over $800 for missions. In the afternoon at 3 p. m. we delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the 125 graduates from the different departments of Drake. In the evening we gave a lecture on "The Message for the Ministry of To-day," for the Bible college of the university, and at the close of the service two young men were ordained to the ministry, the pastor conducting the exercises. The afternoon service was presided over by Pres. Hill M. Bell, and the evening service by Dean A. M. Haggard. There were two baptisms at the close of the evening service. It was a great day. We shall have more to say of the school and churches there next week.

News From Many Fields

Northern California.

Greater San Francisco must command our attention this time. And why not? Not a city in all the country has made any more rapid strides in the past three or four years, speaking from the standpoint of the Christian church.

Alameda has made splendid progress under the wise generalship of P. C. Macfarlane. They are already strongly agitating the question of a larger building. Alameda is proving a good recruiting ground for our other churches.

Oakland is gaining very rapidly in membership, audiences and standing in the community. T. A. Boyer is much loved by his people and harmony broods over them. They, too, are beginning to cast about for a permanent, adequate building of their own.

Berkeley is coming to the front grandly under Bro. Darst's able management. Their new $12,000 house is ready for the roof, and will be an ornament and an honor to primitive Christianity in this educational center. They will receive more attention later.

Richmond, which is less than a year old, is turning people away for want of more house room, and the problem there, too, in the very near future, will be to build their auditorium, which is calculated to fit them for one of our strong churches. Bro. A. J. Loken will make a reputation for himself there.

The First church in San Francisco is making decided progress under Bro. Ford's very able work. We understand that they have additions at nearly every service and are preparing to expend some thousands of dollars in improvements there soon.

The Twenty-fourth street mission, under Dr. Morgan's consecrated effort, is to be assisted shortly and will become probably the Fourth Christian church in the city.

The Tenth avenue church is working along, struggling to finish its house of worship, which will be an unusually good and commodious house for a mission church.

And now we come to the gem of the constellation, the West side church. This congregation was organized in 1892, and a year later bought a second-hand building, which they used until one year ago, when they generously donated it to the Tenth avenue church, and it was removed thither and re-erected on a larger scale. Then the West side people began the erection of a $30,000 building, which was made possible by the generous gifts of Sister Nancy S. Douglass, now at home with the Lord. She was a great lover of the principles of primitive Christianity, and yesterday was a red letter day for primitive Christianity on this coast, for it was the occasion of the dedication of this beautiful new building to the worship of God and the salvation of souls. It was an all-day service. The religious agitation generally for the past month along the line of Christian union gave the key and the opportunity for some vigorous presentations of our plea by the pastor, Walter McWhite, in the morning, and by A. M. Elston in the afternoon, while at night Bro. F. S. Ford, of the First church, gave a strong sermon on the great commission, which, of course, is the basis of Christian union. Nine additions in the morning and three in the evening started the work off well in the new home.

The house itself is a thing of beauty, and so well built that it ought to be a joy forever. It has the marks of a workshop and a parlor combined. It is cozy, comfortable, and withal planned to be useful, and fully 1,000 people were seated at the afternoon and evening services.

Unique in dedications, no money was called for, but three offerings were taken up for the benefit of city mission work, the Tenth avenue church especially.

May the Lord greatly prosper the West side church in its new home, and may it become a great power in greater San Francisco.

Christian Colonies in California.

AN OPEN LETTER.

For two years I have been continually traveling over northern and central California in pushing our state missionary work, and have been pained by the fact of colony failures, due to unprincipled men who have bought land nearly worthless, at a few dollars per acre, falsely representing it and selling to eastern buyers at the price of good land.

I have examined enough land in California to know that it is like the members in most churches, i. e., good, bad and indifferent.

I have seen that scores of thousands of settlers are coming to California, and my heart has yearned to protect innocent settlers, especially of our people, and to keep our people who do come from becoming a "disappearing brotherhood" by locating where we have no church.

True they ought to become the nucleus of a church if they do scatter, but the fact is that not one family in 500 who come from the east do become such a nucleus.

I have now completed arrangements to gather our people and locate them where they may become successful and not be lost to the cause we love. I am doing this on my own personal responsibility. Our state mission board has nothing whatever to do with it, and is in no way responsible for it.

If I succeed in thus helping my brethren and at the same time forwarding the cause of Christ in California, give to God the praise. If I fail, blame me for not properly managing.

Colorado.

The Pueblo convention voted to establish a summer assembly in Colorado. This year's session, the first, will be held on the Colorado Chautauqua grounds at Boulder, Aug. 24-31. In addition to the sessions of the Colorado Christian missionary convention and the Colorado Christian woman's board of missions there will be the usual Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor features, but magnified as institutes; also preachers' institutes, church institutes, mission studies, Bible studies, popular lectures and addresses, and probably a concert or other entertainment. In addition to the best talent within the state, one or more brethren from without Colorado are expected to participate. A splendid program is being prepared, and will soon be announced.

L. E. Brown is again at his post in Colorado Springs after a restful vacation period in California. He was accompanied by his wife and daughter, Miss Edith.

Recently Colorado has had too many resignations to suit those of us who remain and labor on in the centennial state. First came Clyde Darsie, of the Broadway church, Pueblo, who has taken the work at Bowling Green, Ohio. Then R. H. Lampkin, of La Junta, who will close Aug. 1. He has not yet decided upon his future field. Then L. E. Scott, at Greeley, who will study in Berkeley Bible seminary. He was immediately succeeded by F. D. Macy, of Corydon, Iowa. Then A. N. Glover, of Colorado City, who has gone to Orange, Cal., and Wm. J. Lockhart, of Fort Collins, who will rest during the summer at Des Moines, and then resume work either in the pastorate or in the evangelistic field. A. E. Dubber, of Wichita, Kan., has been invited to visit the church at Fort Collins. Robert W. Moore, of Lamar, Col., will visit Colorado City. La Junta and Broadway, Pueblo, are looking for suitable men to succeed Brothers Lampkin and Darsie.

The new house of worship at Loveland, E. E. Violett pastor, will be dedicated Lord's day, June 5. Geo. L. Snively will preach in the morning and B. B. Tyler at night. Your correspondent will give a report of the occasion in his next letter.

The new building at Vineland, a country community ten miles east of Pueblo, is to be dedicated Sunday, June 12. The writer is expected to preach in the morning, J. H. Mohrter in the afternoon and R. B. Preston at night. Further report next letter.

A church extension rally is to be held in the Central church of Denver Wednesday, June 8. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, will be the chief speaker. He will be en route to the state conventions of Washington, Oregon and California, where he speaks on church extension.

I. H. Teel, of South McAlester, Indian Territory, has arrived at Canon City and begins his pastorate there June 5.

S. H. Bernard held a meeting with the Cripple Creek church, E. F. Harris pastor, in May. When he arrived there was a foot of snow on the ground, and for a few days it was impossible to get an audience of size. Later, the building was almost filled nightly and packed on Sunday evenings. There were fourteen additions and the pastor's salary was increased. The church was much encouraged. Cripple Creek is a most difficult field.

Colorado needs a number of consecrated, capable ministers, able and willing to work on salaries of $600 or $700 per year in beginning. The fields are hard; nevertheless they are responsive to the men with wisdom, tact, energy and devotion. Available men for such places may address the undersigned at 71 Byers St., Denver.

LEONARD G. THOMPSON.

Denver, June 3.

Hot Springs.

To the scientist, health or pleasure seeker, Hot Springs, Ark., is a most interesting place. After a beneficial sojourn there, I shall, with the permission of the Editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, say a word not only about the place as nature's sanitarium, but also as a mission field.

In a narrow mountain valley are a group of forty-four springs that furnish approximately a million gallons of hot mineral water every day. These springs are all owned by the government, which maintains here an army and navy hospital. The fame of these springs does not rest so much on what the chemist finds in the water as on the mysterious disappearance of disease and pain. What heats the water is another mystery. Nobody knows. Some have supposed caustic lime to be the agent; others that the water is heated by gases and vapors from the interior of the earth. The theory now is that the water flows over beds of radium, the wonderful metal that is now attracting so much attention. And the curative properties of this water are also attributed largely to the presence and effect of radium. Certain it is, as I saw for myself, that vast numbers of people are relieved or wholly cured.

The town is not only a health resort, but a pleasure resort. Not only are the invalids there, but thousands of their friends are with them, and thousands of pleasure seekers are there, for the climate is genial the whole year. These people must find something to do, somewhere to go. There are dances, races, theaters, gambling halls and saloons. Many people here take their first lessons in betting and gambling. For the safety and moral welfare of the visitors, no adequate facilities are furnished. There is not even a Y. M. C. A. The Christian church is almost out in the country. But under the leadership of such worthy men as T. N. Kincaid, the pastor, and Dr. W. H. Connell, elder, our people are moving in the right direction. They have already secured a splendid lot for a building in the center of the town, and they are offered free splendid grounds for a Christian home.

Knowing the situation as I do, and the steady coming of the thousands from all parts of the country, I regard this as the finest missionary field I have ever seen.

These people want somewhere to go and something to do. They are easily accessible. There would be no difficulty in obtaining a good hearing every night in the year.

But the faithful little congregation cannot succeed in this work alone and unaided. Financial help must come from the outside. Surely our brotherhood will not allow so great an opportunity to pass unimproved.

Denver, Col.

J. B. JOHNSON.

Virginia.

From now to the last of September will be the protracted meeting season in this state, and never in the history of the state have the people been more anxious to hear the "old gospel."

C. E. Elmore has just closed a short meeting at Crewe with ten added.

The last reports from Blacksburg state that W. G. Johnson is having a great meeting in that college town. Only recently was this church organized. F. F. Bullard, who is noted for having a long head, seized upon the opportunity, enlisted the sympathy of the state board, purchased the Baptist house of worship, and got things in shape for an aggressive fight. Some excellent souls are back of the move.

The first year's history of the Virginia Christian college is a thing of the past. It was in all respects a successful year. A large number of students were enrolled. This school is located in Lynchburg, in the center of the state, and must prove one of the greatest factors in the evangelization of the state.

Charlottesville has at last secured a preacher. I have not heard his name, but we extend a cordial welcome and bid him Godspeed.

J. C. Reynolds, a Virginia son, now the evangelist in the Bluestone district, West Virginia, is having wonderful success. The whole district seems to be coming to life.

Sunday night the pastor of this church preached on, "How to Kill a Church." The house was packed. He made an unmerciful attack upon the dispensary, the citizen's saloon. It created quite a sensation and did much good. Strike the liquor devil in whatever form he may appear, and you will hear a howl. The Lord save us from the dispensary curse. I look upon it as a greater evil than the open saloon. It makes an evil appear respectable, stifles conviction, kills the temperance conscience. The town, church members included, operate an evil that they declare to be a sin in an individual.

The Lord pity and enlighten the poor deluded preachers and church members who contribute toward fastening a dispensary upon people, believing it to be the lesser of two evils. We cannot afford to compromise. The lesser of two evils? Let sinners decide such questions; we must abstain from the very appearance of evil. A Christian cannot vote for liquor in any form without stepping down from his high position.

Washington State Letter.

Members of the Central church, Spokane, with the best house of worship of any of our churches in the northwest, are demonstrating the value of good equipment for service by the large audiences and rapid growth they are having. They dedicated their new thirty thousand dollar church Dec. 6, 1903. Since that date 102 have been added to the membership at the regular services, nearly one half of the additions were by confession of faith. They have reduced the church debt more than $3,000 since Jan. 1, and have now granted their pastor, B. E. Utz and wife, three months' time for much needed rest (with salary continued). Brother and Sister Utz are now in St. Louis. The church and pastor are to be congratulated on the splendid work they are doing in Spokane. In the absence of the pastor the pulpit is being supplied by members of the congregation and by visiting brethren. If any of our ministers who read this expect to be passing this way soon, write to J. M., Rookery Bldg.

Bro. Harry Benton and wife, both of whom are able preachers, removed from Elgin, Ore., to Pomeroy, Wash. Welcome. The work at Rockford, under Brother Dean's ministry, is growing. A new building is the next thing in the progress of the work there. Brother Beaudreau is the efficient minister at Latah, and all needed preparations are being made for the camp-meeting to be held there. Tekoa church prospers under Brother Flinn's ministry—forty-five additions since Sept. 15, and all departments growing.

J. M. Morris becomes pastor of the Fremont church after the state convention. Brother Morris has worked hard and faithfully as state secretary and evangelist during the year.

The writer made a visit to his former field, Eugene, Ore., last week, and preached the baccalaureate sermon for the Eugene divinity school. It was a very great pleasure to meet again the many who through six years of service together proved loyal to the cause that is growing so rapidly in that center of influence. My successor, Bro. J. S. McCallum, fills a large place in the community and is well liked.

President Campbell of the university of Oregon, a member of the Christian church, is a man of great power and of much help to the work of our church and school. President Sanderson of the divinity school is a man of rare talents, and has done a work there that is equaled by few such enterprises. He is ably assisted by an able and faithful corps of teachers. There were four graduates and four ordained to the ministry this year from this school.

Kentucky Mission Report for May.

John Lord, E. S. Lewis, Walter Carter, H. Gayle Spencer, C. M. Summers, S. P. Pittman, J. Stuart Mill, G. W. Campbell, and Chase James are the students who went out to regular appointments during the month whose expenses were paid by the board. They were in the field 37 days, preached 41 sermons, visited 11 places, organized four Sunday-schools, made 85 visits, and received for self $29.62.

R. A. Hovious reports in Casey and Pulaski counties, 12 days, 14 sermons, five places visited, $2.50 for self. He induced the people of Dry Fork community to cut and haul enough logs to mill to build a house of worship of the lumber they will make, and at Casey's creek the people will go to work to secure material for a house of worship. He expects to solicit funds for purchase of a tent to be used in that field, to be the property of the state board. He is commended to the brethren as a worthy brother and asking help for a worthy cause.

Jas. E. Thomas was at Beattyville two days; four sermons, one officer appointed, one meeting of officers, 11 visits, $10 for self. J. W. Edwards was at work in Grayson Co. 18 days, preached 19 sermons, added five, located one preacher, 15 visits, $12.75 for Kentucky missions, and $10.10 for self. He has just begun work after a rest of a few months. He will spend much time in Grayson and adjoining counties. W. L. Lacy reports in the past two months in Wolfe and Magoffin Co., 23 days, 21 sermons, four added, one preacher located, $5 for Kentucky missions, $12.75 for self, $17.50 for local work. D. C. McCallum was at Irvine five days, five sermons, one officers' meeting, 13 visits, $10 for Kentucky missions, $12.50 for self. W. D. Humphrey was at Oakland and Wellsburg one Sunday each, preached seven sermons, one Sunday-school organized, $9.30 for self. D. G. Combs was in northeastern Kentucky 18 days, 23 sermons, one added, three places visited, one Christian Endeavor organized, 41 visits, $9 for general missions, $2 for self. W. E. Sutherland was sick at the time of the report, and has not been able to do any work for some days. He reports outlook for good results favorable in his field.

H. J. Derthick was at work all the month, preached eight sermons, one baptism. Ernest W. Elliott spent several days with him in Jackson Co. and at Berea, and he reports that his visit was helpful. Arrangements have been made for regular work at McKee, county seat of Jackson Co.

H. C. Runyon was at work all the month at Latonia, four added, 82 visits, $5 for Kentucky missions, $8.75 for self. Audiences and interest good. A. T. Felix was at Bardstons and Springfield all the month, one added. Work doing well. Wm. Gross, 16 days, 23 sermons, six added, three officers appointed, one church organized. L. B. Haskins was at Erlanger two Sundays, four sermons, four added, $13 for general missions. Work doing well. A. K. Brooks was at Jackson four days, five sermons, two officers' meetings, 14 visits. Active preparations are being made for building.

H. W. Elliott was at work all the month. He was at a number of district and county conventions, preached every Sunday at one or more places, and collected for the work $618.13. He was with the Munfordville church and raised enough money, about $350, to pay the indebtedness on the house of worship, and dedicated it. W. F. Rogers has toiled faithfully at this post, and has succeeded in a very difficult undertaking.

Our receipts are better this month, and we urge our friends to see that they are kept better each month until the convention at Winchester in September. Only three months now until the close of our fiscal year, and it will require vigorous effort to close the year afloat.

J. H. Stambaugh was at Valley View a few days in a meeting. There were 32 added, and the indications point to establishing a congregation there that can take care of itself at no distant date. Movement is on foot to buy the house or build another.

The Kinetoscope as a Money Maker.

A Profitable Field for the Man With Limited Capital.

The field for the profitable operation of the Stereopticon and the Kinetoscope or moving picture apparatus is undoubtedly greater to-day than ever before. The improvement in photographic processes and the perfection to which the Kinetoscope has been brought insures its value as an entertainment feature. As proof of this, notice the fact that all of the vaudeville theatres in the country regularly include some form of kinetoscope exhibition as a leading feature of their bills.

Recent improvements and up-to-date methods of manufacture have so reduced the cost of the necessary apparatus that a very limited investment will cover all that is necessary for giving a really first-class entertainment.

The man with limited capital and a reasonable amount of energy can turn his hand to nothing more profitable to-day.

T. H. McAllister, 49 Nassau street, New York, manufacturing optician and dealer in lantern slides, has issued a catalogue of over 250 pages, with full descriptions of various styles of apparatus and carefully classified lists of thousands of views. This catalogue is free on request. In addition to the slides now in stock, new ones are in preparation representing the actual naval and military operations in Russia and Japan, and bulletins of these will be issued from time to time as they are ready. These bulletins, with the catalogue, are free. Send for them.

India Jottings.

May is here in all of her splendor, sunshine and warmth and a goodly number of our missionaries are seeking refuge from the heat of the plains at Landom, the "saints' rest" of the Himalayas. The heat from the beginning of May on until the rain breaks is a sufficient reason for as many missionaries as possible seeking the cool, refreshing breezes of the hill-tops. By this change the missionaries are enabled to do much better work on their return to their fields of labor.

Of our own district Sisters Graybiel, Frost and Dr. Smith are those of our number who are enjoying the change. The two former have well earned this rest time, as their duties at Mahoba have been very heavy the past year, while Dr. Smith, like all the rest who have gone before her, is grappling with the study of the language. In their absence from Mahoba Brother and Sister Davis, in company with Miss Gordon, of Bina, are looking after the interests of the girls and work in general at that large and important station.

We of India hail with rejoicing the addition of every dollar in the fund for India's Bible college. Such marks a new era in the history of our work in this needy land. The committee have selected Jubbalapore, the capital of central India, as the place for its establishment. We understand that Brother Brown, of Harda, will go there some time in June to make all necessary preparations as to ground and plans and at the same time carry on his class of students who have been under his instruction at Harda. Brother Brown and family will be missed very much from the work at Harda, but their influence and Christian work at the new and important center of learning will be far-reaching in its results.

Such changes weaken very much the already established stations, yet without such changes progress in our work can never be accomplished. Who will dare say, "Stand still," when the Lord's command is, "Go forward." The needs to day of every unmanned station cannot be met alone by money. There must be by someone, somewhere, the forsaking of father, mother, brothers and sisters, home and loved ones. There must be servants to answer the call, there must be soldiers to obey the command. How many of our bright young ministers in the home land who make touching, thrilling appeals to the people on foreign mission day (and God bless them for it) to "go or send" the gospel to the needy of every land are really ready to obey the "go" expressed by Jesus? Brethren of this blessed ministry of service, is there no thought for reflection here? The Master call eth for thee. The church desires to send you forth. Shall it be said of you, "Ye heard and obeyed not"?

Of all the stations in India under the C. W. B. M. and F. C. M. S. Bilaspur is the only station which might be called fully manned. Every other station needs helpers, but few there are to be found ready and willing to go. This thought ought to bring the church to its knees in prayer that a host of young men and women also might be raised up "to proclaim liberty to the captives" in every land. That this year may witness a mighty revival in this direction is the desire of every worker on the foreign field.

Early in the year 1901 a committee representing the Christian mission made the following proposal to a large number of representative missionaries of the various missions at work in India, Burmah and Ceylon in the interest of Christian unity:

We propose the unity of all Christians upon the following basis:

1. Faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God.
2. The acceptance of the New Testament scriptures as the only rule of faith and practice.

In the replies that came back there was on the whole a manifestation for a closer union and also a number of inquiries regarding the Disciples of Christ and the Christian mission in India. Bro. W. M. Forrest, late of Calcutta, India, has rendered the cause a noble service in the publication of two tracts which intelligently, clearly and scripturally tell "who we are and what we plead for." The tracts are "A Plea for the Union of Christ's Church" and "The Christian Mission and Christian Unity." These tracts are being circulated among the missionaries who manifested a deep interest in the subject of unity.

Brother Forrest understands thoroughly the way to present such matters for the promotion of Christian unity in India, and, although the University of Virginia has captured his service, we have every reason to believe that India has captured his heart, and we shall look forward to having many such helpful tracts and messages from him in helping to bring Christ's people of this land into that closer oneness.

The writer had the pleasure of a short visit at Mahoba lately, the occasion being the marriage of six young couples: six boys belonging to the Damoh orphanage and six girls belonging to Mahoba. The church was beautifully decorated with various plants and flowers under the guiding hand of Choti Mama Ji (Miss Frost). The church was crowded with friends and visitors to witness the ceremony. How very different it must have appeared to those of them whose only conception of marriage is a beating of drums, a procession, a display and plenty to eat.

We long for the establishing of pure Christian homes in this land and we hail with joy every step in this direction. Lately a Mohammedan said to me, "The only people who really get the good out of home life in this land are the Christians; our women folks are kept under purdah, they grow up to be ignorant and can never be real helpmates to their husbands."

He spoke a truism. Not until the dark veil of ignorance is lifted from their eyes and their women given liberty can they expect the home life to be better.

Christianity affects the home life of every soul and nation which embraces its teachings, and when the trumpet call is given and the nations appear before God it will be seen that a large part of the program of Christianity was wrought out in the home life of every nation.

Kansas for Christ!

"RANK CONFERS OBLIGATION."

Kansas is the very laboratory of reform. Within her borders new forces battle with old wrongs. Her fame has gone abroad; but her own problems are always at hand. They are perennial. Much, truly, has been given; surely much will be required. Will they not say to Kansas, "Physician, heal thyself." "Rank confers obligation." The Disciples of Christ have no way of escape from the responsibility. They, of all others, must "come after him" in the patient search for souls. A people believing in the gospel as "the power of God unto salvation" is nothing if not evangelistic. The appeal is to us. What will we do for Kansas' Christless homes and hearts, her army of young men and women who own no allegiance to Christ nor church, her boys and girls in training for manhood and womanhood in environments where the "power of God" is an unrealized force?

As Kansas and Disciples we are responsible. We have delegated our share in this work to our board and secretary. They have been faithful; they have used all the resources we have placed at their command; they are appealing to us to do our part as churches in the support of the work they have accepted at our hands. Our immediate duty is the raising of the apportionment for Kansas missions before the end of June. This is the least we can do. It will insure a successful closing of the year's work and render possible a vigorous campaign, unburdened by debt in the year we are about to enter. This, for Kansas' sake and for the sake of his kingdom.

Manhattan, Kansas.

Brethren of Kansas, listen a moment. Occasionally someone asks the question, "What's the matter with Kansas?" And it usually turns out that Kansas is all right. Yes, usually all right. But with only 50,000 Disciples out of a total of 1,000,000 are we willing to admit that Kansas is all right religiously, with only five Disciples out of 100 population? No not as long as we are loyal to the "divine plea."

How can we change these conditions? For answer look at the work that has been and is being done by our state board of missions. And think how much more might have been accomplished had we furnished the means. Our last state convention at Newton unfurled the banner on which was inscribed the motto, "Seven thousand dollars for Kansas missions this year." Under the inspiration of this motto our board planned for larger work for the Master, confident that the brotherhood would rally to their support in this great cause. Now, brethren, shall we disappoint them and have the annual report marred by a deficit when we assemble at Paola? Remember, the year closes with June 30. The time is short. "What thou doest [for Kansas missions] do quickly."

Now for a strong pull and a pull all together for $7,000 this year. All together, now, for Christ's sake.

Ministerial Exchange.

Midlothian, Decatur, Rockwall, Alvarado and Sparta, Texas, all want some one to hold them a meeting.

C. C. Dobbs, of Bigelow, Mo., desires to preach and attend one of our schools. He has had several years' experience as a teacher and preacher, and is very highly recommended.

Harold E. Monser, Pontiac, Ill., reports that the church with which he had an engagement for a meeting, has cancelled the engagement on account of local conditions, and that he will be open for engagement after July 5.

Any church desiring pulpit supply or planning to locate a graduate preacher, should address the ministers' association, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio.

Brother Porter, of Lamar, Mo., can be secured to hold meetings or preach half time. He is well recommended.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

When this comes to hand the hosts will be gathering in Carrollton. Do not miss it, and if you cannot come Friday, June 17, come as soon as you can, but be sure and come; that, after all, is the main thing. Come!

Memphis does things about right when they try: as, for instance, the appointing of M. J. Nicoson as the delegate of the church and school to Carrollton, and the sending of Sister Nicoson by the C. W. B. M. to represent them in the work of their convention. Now, that's doing business right, and many of our congregations would make money by doing the same thing. Do that Sunday and send them Monday.

The delinquent list of pledges made and NOT paid will not redound to the credit of some of our friends, but it looks now as if it must go that way. This I much regret, and do not want at all to have it so, but what can I do?

Tickets are on sale June 16, and can be bought any day up to June 21, good for returning until June 23. But you come on Friday.

Yes, Carrollton gives us lodging and breakfast. You pay for dinners and suppers, if you wish them, at not over 25 cents each.

It is not too late, if you cannot come until Monday. Then send E. H. Kellar word you will be there Monday; it will help him, and may help you, too.

Word is coming to us that Missouri has "broken the record on children's day," and all of us are glad to hear it and are interested in it.

Among the friends of this work is Mrs. Ann Garver, poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith and good works. Sister Garver always sends us an offering each year, and it encourages no little to have the fellowship of such.

Moses told the people to stop their offerings in his day for a certain work, and we had; to send $40 back to the First, Kansas City, who had long since remitted their apportionment to state Bible-school work. As it was the only school in Kansas City that had, we felt that we should not impose on such generosity and liberality.

Finally, brethren, farewell, for this is my last year in the present relationship, and feeling keenly the goodness of my brethren for these many years, it is with no little regret that I make this decision. I thank the many who, in their goodness, have written urging that I continue as your secretary, but it seems better to me that I retire now while the work is in good shape and can be turned over to younger men. I also feel that I have been so long from home that I would love to be awhile with the wife that has helped so often and so faithfully in all, but especially in this relationship, so that the Carrollton convention will witness the close of my service for you in the field, and I dare not attempt to tell you how grateful I am to so many in so many ways for what you have done and sought to do that you might help me honor the Christ and serve the children of this day and generation. Only I pray that the Lord of hosts may bless and prosper you for it, and I assure you, one and all, that it will ever be my pleasure in every way possible to show my brethren how sincerely appreciative I am of all they have done for me. You did it for His sake as well as mine, and He will recompense you for it "in that day." H. F. DAVIS.

Children's Voices.

The news from the children's day offering is most gratifying.

Maysville, Ky., Sunday-school gave $70 for heathen missions in 1902, $101 in 1903 and $150 this year. J. T. Kackley is the superintendent.

Hillsboro, Ind., Sunday-school raised $50. It gave $35 last year. Dr. A. S. Faulkner is the superintendent.

The First Sunday-school, Allegheny, Pa., comes forward with an offering of $600. J. V. Schrock is the superintendent.

Seventh street Sunday-school, Richmond, Va., with an enrollment of 250, raised $520. C. W. Throckmorton is the superintendent.

The Sunday-school at Newport, Ky., raised about $70. Last year the offering was $30. Paris C. Brown is the superintendent.

O. A. Hawkins' class of young men in the Seventh street Sunday-school, Richmond, Va., raised $110.

Rushville, Ind., Sunday-school raised $136.98, last year $100.05. Carl V. Nipp is the superintendent.

The Tabernacle Sunday-school, Marion, Ind., raised $89.40. Last year $25.00. J. M. Stewart is the superintendent.

The Sunday-school at Frankfort, Ky., raised over $100. Miss Mamie Powell is the superintendent.

A New Professor.

Hall L. Calhoun was recently elected to a professorship in the College of the Bible, at Lexington, Kentucky. He promptly accepted. Tuesday, June 7, during the commencement exercises, he delivered his inaugural address in Morrison chapel. "Constructive Christianity" was his subject. He met the full demands of those who expected the most. It was a masterly address—scholarly, sane, Christian, with grasp and poise. It will rank with the greatest addresses ever delivered in this historic forum. It stirred the hearts of the Lexington people. It was most cordially received and highly commended on every hand.

Hall L. Calhoun is a new figure on our horizon. He is a son of Tennessee. A graduate with the highest honors of the College of Arts and of the College of the Bible, with three years additional in Harvard and Yale just completed, he comes to his new duties with exceptional equipment. He earned his degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He emerges from an obscurity as profound as that of Garfield. As yet he is hardly heard of out of his own immediate vicinity. The defects of his boyish training, literary and religious, the poverty of his youth, the humble duties of early manhood, the modest simplicity of his whole life, have been rather helps than hindrances. Such accidents in life help to keep the preacher on a level with the people from whom he sprang and whom he serves. Prof. Calhoun is rugged, robust and indomitable, the incarnation of physical force and intellectual energy. Gentle as a woman and humble as a child, he naturally wins the love and respect of all.

As a speaker he ranks high in the difficult art of clear and condensed statements of points and conclusions. His language is simple and terse, as becomes a scholar and a thinker, and a Christian teacher. The habitual use of large and uncommon and technical words is a symptom of a cloudy mind. He is free from the highly rhetorical and pedantic. The new professor is not a phrase-monger. He has too much to say and is too much in earnest to employ the cheap and paltry decorations of speech.

The present faculty of the College of the Bible consists of J. W. McGarvey, I. B.

Grubbs, B. C. Deweese, S. M. Jefferson and H. L. Calhoun. What a splendid faculty this is! Here is combined the wisdom of age and experience, the scholarship and poise of meridian life, and the hope and enthusiasm of young manhood. All are men, tried and true, in whom the spirit of the Lord dwells richly. It would be difficult to equal their combined gifts and graces. With becoming humility they rejoice in all the knowledge they have attained, and yet they are eager and tireless in searching for new truth. They stand with their faces and not with their backs to the sunrise. While they are leaders, they are willing to be led. They are growing men.

F. M. RAINS.

Female Orphan School, Camden Point, Mo.

"An immense throng gathered at Camden Point for commencement. The Platte City church was largely represented. Bro. Robert Graham Frank, of Liberty, delivered a superb address. There were eleven graduates in the literary and scientific course and two in the course of piano music, with one postgraduate in the last named department. We noticed the following preachers present: T. A. Abbott, Kansas City; T. H. Capp, James C. Creel and J. P. Pinkerton, of Plattsburg; R. E. Calithan, Dearborn; Jno. P. Jesse, Gower; R. G. Frank, Liberty, and George Everett, Camden Point.

"The official board decided unanimously to change the name of the school from Female orphan school to Missouri Christian college. Some material improvements will be made before the opening of school next September. Money is badly needed to build an addition to the college. They need more room. This is the only school of the Christian church in northwest Missouri, the wealthiest portion of the state, and where our church is strongest. We ought to make it a great institution."—L. S. CUPP, in Platte City Landmark.

The commencement sermon was delivered by D. R. Dungan, of Canton university, Canton, Mo. The attendance for the year was perhaps the largest in the history of the institution. The faculty for the coming year is exceptionally strong, all being graduates from leading colleges and universities and experienced in their respective departments. Members of the faculty will be in attendance during the summer at Missouri university, Chautauqua, New York, Chicago university and Sherwood school of music, Chicago.

E. L. BARHAM, president.

Dedication of Our World's Fair Pavilion.

The world has heard of a great many proverbs about the folly of delay. But when nature interferes with man's plans and causes the postponement of their completion, good sometimes follows. It was so in the case of the dedication of the Christian church building at the World's Fair. For after the storms of the week before there succeeded a week of beautiful weather, and a more ideal day for a dedication than last Saturday could not be imagined. The week's delay, too, had made it possible for the ladies engaged in the work to get their exhibits more perfectly arranged and the decorations better displayed. Unfortunately, however, some exhibitors have been remiss in sending their exhibits and there was some vacant wall space. Only one college—Christian college, of Columbia, Mo.—had put up its exhibit, though Kentucky university was represented by some books. And but two of our publishing houses—the Christian Publishing Company and the Christian Companion—were represented. But the societies—the foreign, the home, church extension, C. W. B. M. and the Benevolent association—had their displays very nearly complete and well arranged.

Brethren and sisters from many different parts of the country were present, even England being represented by Bro. Thomas Burwell, a deacon and choir leader of the West London Tabernacle. On the register kept in the building were found the names of hundreds of Disciples of Christ from all portions of the United States. Prior to the dedication a photo of a group of Disciples present was taken in front of the building. A large number of others who were present at the dedication came too late to be included in the picture.

The service was begun by the singing of "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," after which prayer was offered by J. M. Philputt. Then came a solo, "Jerusalem," (Parker) beautifully sung by Mrs. J. M. Philputt, Miss Lange, organist of Mt. Cabanne church, accompanying.

Dr. J. H. Garrison, chairman of the committee, explained the origin of the building. He spoke as follows:

"In summer of 1903, I was advised by Bro. A. B. Philputt that I was appointed chairman of a committee to report to the Detroit convention on a religious exhibit to be made during the World's Fair in St. Louis. I corresponded with the other members of the committee. We had in mind something of the general features you now see—that our missionary societies, colleges and other societies should make such an exhibit as they could, but supposed, of course, that it would be done in some of the large buildings on the fair grounds. I did not learn until the night before I started to the Convention that no room had been granted in any of the buildings for any religious exhibit. In a telephonic conversation with Dr. Nicols I learned such was the case. I went to the Detroit convention and recommended to that convention in a report, that, in view of these facts, we undertake, ourselves, as a religious body, to put up our own building and make our own exhibit; that it was not at all in harmony with the fitness of things that there should be a great universal exposition, like that which was being prepared in St. Louis, without having any exhibition of the Christian religion which has been the source and inspiration of all this progress. It is a remarkable fact that the only two business men with me upon the committee disagreed with my recommendation and report after I had prepared it, and the other two ministers who were on the committee with me were not present, so I was under the necessity of making the report myself on my sole authority; but it met with the approval of the convention, and, in a brief appeal made, $1,500 or thereabouts was subscribed for the building and a committee appointed, consisting of myself as chairman; S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati; J. H. Allen, St. Louis; Z. T. Sweeney, Columbus, Ind.; and W. F. Richardson, Kansas City. We appointed a sub-committee of Brother Hoffmann, Brother Scott and some others to assist us in the work, and proceeded to make calls for money and began work as soon as we could. I cannot tell you how much personal correspondence, how much anxiety, or how much labor this has cost some of us. More than we thought in the beginning. But such as it is, we have completed it and it is before you today. If we had had more money we could have made something more imposing, but I am not sure it would have been any better adapted to our purposes or quite so much in harmony with the spirit of our movement as to have this simple, plain building, in its hexagonal character, at least, reproducing the form of the study of Alexander Campbell at Bethany, W. Va., though of course on a much larger scale. The exhibits are not yet complete, but you see a good deal of progress has been made, though a number of colleges have not yet their exhibits in readiness. I have asked our widely known brother, Z. T. Sweeney, who is president of the American Christian missionary convention which is to meet in this city in October next, to be present in his official capacity, as well as a widely known minister of the gospel, and make a brief address on this occasion. You will now have the privilege of hearing him."

After the address by Brother Sweeney—reported on another page—a financial statement was presented and some subscriptions towards the cost and maintenance of the building received.

There are two drawbacks to universal advancement. First: Ignorance of nature's laws. These are always wholesome and helpful, and if we move in harmony with them, they will carry us onward and upward; but if we move in opposition to them, they will crush us ruthlessly and remorselessly. The second is ignorance of each other. Men war upon each other because they do not understand one another. What American could go forth and fight any nation which displays its products here to-day! We feel that we know better and love better every one of the nations represented in this exposition. We feel that one common end animates us all, and that end is the subjugation of nature's forces to man's uses. The first thing the Almighty said to man was, "Have dominion over the earth." The charter of all civilization lies in that primal command. There are in it three things: First: Pry into nature's secrets and expound them. As a result, we have science. Second: Lay hold of nature's forces and employ them. As a result, we have art. Third: Take possession of nature's riches and enjoy them. As a result, we have culture. Science, art and culture make up the unit of civilization, and the difference between man in his most degraded and most highly civilized conditions lies precisely in the ratio that he carries out the first command ever addressed to him by his Maker. In the obedience to this great commandment, all men will be brought into unity and brotherhood. We are rapidly arriving at a uniform system of weights and measures. We are coming to a uniform system of jurisprudence and diplomacy, and these will lead us ultimately to one common language in the expression of our thoughts.

I do not overestimate the influence of Christianity when I say that its chief end is to establish in the minds of men the unity of God and the brotherhood of mankind; that we have one Father and are all brothers; and, apposite to the influence of Christianity in this great work, I would challenge your attention for a few moments to the parable of the Master when he says: "Again the kingdom of heaven is like unto merchant men seeking great pearls, who, when they found one pearl of great price went and sold all they had and bought that pearl." Many and varied have been the terms employed to define the present age. Some call it the age of steam; others the age of electricity; some the age of gold, others the age of silver. I believe that there is one word in that parable which describes the present age more clearly than any other word in the English language; it is the word "seeking." Never was there a time when men were seeking so widely and variedly as they are now. They are going down into the unfathomed caves of ocean, and bringing up many a gem of purest ray serene; they are digging down into the bowels of the earth and bringing up, on rock and rib, the story of ancient earth life; they are peering out with eyes of telescopic power into the depths of space beyond us where worlds are born and stars are infanted and suns are wrapped in swaddling bands of fire, and bringing to view the great truths of the universe. And there is not a sentiment of my heart, as there is not a principal of our holy religion, that is not in deepest sympathy with this seeking spirit: "On Christian or on heathen grounds the pearl's divine wherever found." Long may they continue this seeking and finding to—"finding books in running brooks; sermons in stones and good in everything."

But in the midst of this search for goodly pearls, have we found the Pearl of Great Price? I believe that we have, and it is the truth that underlies the church of Jesus Christ—the truth that Peter confessed at Cæsarea Philippi when he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and of which Christ said, "Upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." This is the key to all human history. It is the anvil upon which have been forged all the weapons of human progress. Mr. Edison tells us that every great labor-saving machine that was brought forth in the nineteenth century came from Christian civilizations. Edwin Arnold says "there are not ten miles of territory upon this earth, not under the influence of Christian civilization, where man's life or woman's virtue is safe for a single day," and I say to you that the nineteenth century did not produce a cosmopolitan man outside of Christian civilization. Where did we go for Garfields, Gambettas and Gladstones, for Bismarcks and world rulers?

But what about Li Hung Chang you say? Some men may think he was cosmopolitan, but he was not. He was not in any sense cosmopolitan, he was a heathen. Some of you will remember when he asked the leaders of the Boxer rebellion to come and meet him, promising them safe conduct, and the next morning their heads were found floating in the bay. For twenty-seven long years the great Chinese diplomat had an American Christian at his elbow pumping him full of the religion of Jesus Christ, and he got his character from the Christianity he thus imbibed. The greatest argument against Confucianism is China; the strongest argument against Zoroastrianism is Persia and against Mohammedanism Turkey, while the grandest plea in favor of Jesus Christ is great, free America; and America is such because of the Christian religion.

has been our mission to hold up and present to the world, this is the basis on which our church is built, this confession that every man must make who comes into it. There is not a proposition from the beginning to the end of the Bible for the believing of which a man will be saved but the proposition on which our faith is based. It is broad enough for every Christian to stand upon on this earth, but it is not broad enough for the sectarians to stand upon. But, they object, "we want something more than this, we want an enthusiasm." If that does not enthrall a man, what will? "But we want a pentecostal shower, we want an outpouring." I have no objections, I should like to have it myself, but let me tell you if it ever strikes this world again every sectarian will be preaching to sinners to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. That is the way it always strikes the world. But this great pearl, the pearl of all pearls, the truth of all truths, stands out before us, and it has been our mission as a people to present this truth to the world. We have been the pioneers, the sappers and miners in that great work, but I thank God it isn't our plea any longer. It is the plea of the great religious world to-day. We have had to suffer for that, we have been called peculiar for that, but to-day it is the plea of the world, and I feel safe in saying that there is not a Protestant church in the city to-day in which you could not make that confession and walk up and join it just like you would join another church. "The disciples were called Christians first at Antioch," and that is the name of Jesus Christ's people in this world, of the great people who defend it and stand for it.

It is this proposition which forms the confession of faith of the Christian church which has erected this building in the midst of these palaces of human art and science. It is this proposition that shall grow green with youth when all such buildings shall be covered with mold or crumble amid the fires that shall consume an unsanctified world. It is this principle that shall be the consummation of the universal brotherhood that shall be established when the great cry shall go ringing along the arches of heaven, "The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and for ever."

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Bentonville, June 2.—Evangelist W. W. Boyle, assisted by A. W. Shaffer, singer, began a revival meeting at this place in the Tabernacle, which was erected for that purpose, on May 15. To date, there have been 16 baptisms and one addition by statement. Large crowds come out, regardless of the rainy weather, and much interest is manifested.—"B."

Fayetteville, June 9.—There were 11 additions to the First church last week: one restored and ten conversions.—H. M. RAGLAND.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, June 8.—Two added by letter last Lord's day at H street. One baptized from the Methodists at the evening service. Sunday-school contribution to building fund was $20. Our house packed full, despite the very hot weather. The Church of Christ at Alexandria is doing well. The writer will begin a meeting for the 84th Christian church of this city Lord's day, June 19. Claude C. Jones is minister.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

ILLINOIS.

Pontiac.—Evangelist Harold E. Monser, with Mr. and Mrs. Guy B. Williamson, song evangelists, are assisting Pastor W. G. McColley in a tent meeting at Pontiac.

Ellsworth, June 6.—Twenty-eight confessions in five nights at Ellsworth; we continue. Have two dates not taken as yet for revivals this fall, October and November. Raised $25 for Children's day offering.—Evangelist J. BENNETT.

Carmi.—One baptism yesterday—a confession from the Presbyterians.—FRANK B. THOMAS, pastor.

Sheldon, June 6.—We have expended about $600 in remodeling our church, which has added much to its appearance and has made it one of the nicest houses in town.—G. H. CLARKE.

INDIANA.

Marion, June 6.—"Children's day" a great success. The whole day yesterday was given over to children's work. Last night was the climax, when "The Conquering Christ" was given by 50 boys and girls. More than a thousand people were in attendance, and hundreds could not get into the house. The grand total of the day's work was $89.40. The offering last year was $25.00. Everybody was happy over the result. We are planning to have, from the Tabernacle church, a large delegation at the national convention in October.—W. S. BUCHANAN.

Muncie, June 9.—(Central church). Another addition last Sunday, 16 the past month. I solemnized two marriages during the past week—Miss Lucy Dowling to Albert Whetsel and R. Pearl Hubbard to Wm. Myers. Our audiences are increasing and interest good.—CHAS. E. SHULTZ, minister.

Salt Creek church, Brown Co., has just closed a most successful meeting held by Eld. J. M. Cross, of Nineveh. Bro. Cross was handicapped by previous engagements, but he filled them and would come at night, so most of the services were at night. Some days he drove fifty miles to meet his appointments. The meeting covered a period of five nights, with 25 additions, all by immersion. Bro. Cross is a personal worker, and has the happy faculty of getting the church to come into touch with those who are outside the kingdom.—C. S. CAMPBELL, Supt. Sunday-school.

IOWA.

Seymour, June 6.—More than raised our apportionment as a Sunday-school yesterday. Delivered the memorial address, May 29, at Decatur City.—S. B. ROSS.

Lexington, Ky.

Arlington, June 6.—May 30 was a record breaker for Sunday-school attendance in Arlington. It was the last day of our "red and blue contest," and when reports were read we found 322 present and $695 collection. Yesterday we observed children's day. A good program was rendered to an audience of about six hundred, many being turned away for lack of room. Bros. Lawrence and Edward Wright also began a meeting for us here yesterday. We are hoping for a very pleasant and profitable evangelistic series with these excellent brethren.—W. E. REAVIS, pastor.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Okmulgee, June 6.—Bro. Geo. H. Farley, of Burgin, Ky., on last Thursday night closed a ten days' meeting with us, in which about fifty additions from all sources were made to the membership of our little congregation, bringing our membership up to about ninety. This congregation has called Bro. Farley to preach for us, and we sincerely hope he will accept the call, as we are sure he can do a good work for the cause at this place.—W. W. WOOD.

KANSAS.

Wellington, June 10.—There were two baptisms at prayer-meeting last night, both of them from the Methodists. The work here is in a most prosperous condition.—H. M. BARNETT.

MISSOURI.

Liberal, June 3.—Have had five additions since last report, three by letter and two by obedience. Preacher not reported came to us at Minden Mines from the Christian Adventists.—J. P. CRANK.

Marceline, June 10.—There were two additions at Bucklin the fourth Sunday in last month, and one more here the first Sunday.—A. MUNYON, pastor.

Shelbyville, June 9.—The work here is in splendid condition. Two united by letter last Lord's day, making five additions since last report. There is a splendid feeling here among all churches.—CLARENCE E. WAGNER.

Springfield, June 8.—The work at Carl Junction is moving along nicely. F. M. Wood, of Springfield, is doing good work in Webster county among the country churches. He also preaches at Dixon.—JOSEPH GAYLOR.

Mountain View.—Our meeting at Rolla closed with ten additions to the church. We reorganized the church in all departments and set in order the things that were wanting. Bro. E. M. Romine rendered much valuable service. During the Bible-school year ending May 31 I labored in the field 302 days, had 118 additions to the church, organized five new Bible-schools, one new congregation and three new young people's societies of Christian Endeavor, and raised in money and pledges for all purposes $1,347. My next meeting will be at Naylor, Mo., followed by a six days' debate.—T. J. HEAD, state Bible-school evangelist.

Maryville, June 7.—Children's day at the Maryville Christian church will be long remembered. About 400 at the Bible-school and a collection of $175 and perhaps more; for missions a gain of $60 over last year. We are proud of this collection considering the fact that our Easter offering to the orphan home only two months ago was $276.09; our program given at the evening service was attended by 1,300 or 1,400 people. Much interest is being

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn, June 7.—Our special meeting at the Humboldt street church of Christ closed last Lord's day. Twenty-four were added to the church during the meeting. Bro. Corey's strong, clear, gospel sermons were helpful to all. We enter upon our summer work full of hope and zeal.—JOS. KEVIL.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Cherokee, June 2.—The convention of churches in Woods county, held at Ingersoll, Okla., May 24 and 25, was a great success in every way. Although it was their first convention, there were about nine churches represented, and everything was most harmonious. It was decided to put a man in the county to evangelize and assist the weak churches in every way possible. It was also decided to locate a college and Bible school. The county will be amply able to do this, for there are about thirty-five churches in it, and a strong membership. One was baptized by M. B. Ingle, at a point about five miles from Cherokee, on May 30. There will soon be four new church buildings under way in the county, at Byron, Carmen, Granton, and in the country eight miles south of Cherokee. M. B. Ingle preached the memorial sermon for the Odd Fellows at Lambert, on Sunday, May 29.—M. B. INGLE.

Shawnee, June 6.—Please report five additions at Shawnee yesterday; four by letter and one from Christian connection. Our people are thinking seriously of a new house, which our cause in this flourishing city requires.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

OHIO.

Hamilton, June 6.—Building crowded: Children's day a pronounced success. Offering exceeds other years.—A. M. GROWDEN.

Martin's Ferry, June 6.—We had one confession at the morning service on Sunday.—G. F. ASSITER.

Rudolph, June 6.—Splendid day yesterday. The Sunday-school gave more than $1 per member, offering $169.55.—JOHN MUNRO.

Bellaire, June 6.—Six added here yesterday—three by statement, one reclaimed and two baptized; two baptized last Sunday. Children's day will be observed next Lord's day.—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Painesville, June 3.—During the first nineteen days of May I was in an evangelistic meeting at Carbon Hill. This is a little church in southern Ohio, which has had no preaching for three years. There were twenty-seven additions; twenty by baptism, three from the U. B., one from the M. E. and three reclaimed. They expect to have part time preaching the coming year. Considering all the difficulties under which we labored, it was certainly a good meeting.—J. P. MEYERS, pastor, Painesville, O.

OREGON.

Athens, May 23.—All departments of church work are in a healthy condition, and we are planning and working for larger things.—J. W. JENKINS.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Perryopolis, June 11.—We are now in the third week of our meeting, with 39 added, mostly heads of families and by confession and baptism.—R. A. OMER, evangelist; J. M. BELL, pastor.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, June 9.—We have had two additions by confession and baptism, one by letter and one confession since Elder Chas. E. Smith came with us on May 1. Brother Smith impresses us as being an earnest, capable man.—W. D. ROSS, elder.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville, June 10.—Five additions to Woodland street church since last report: four by baptism, one by letter. The writer delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the graduates of the Tennessee Female college. There were 23 graduates from this excellent school.—JOS. DARDEN ARMISTEAD.

TEXAS.

True, June 6.—We closed a meeting at Round Timbers, May 20. We organized a church at that place with a membership of 31, also a Junior Endeavor of 25 members. We then went to Throckmorton, where we had a grand meeting. We baptized three on Sunday evening. Organized a Senior Endeavor with 20 charter members. We expect to commence a meeting here to-night, if we are not rained out. All of the meetings have been well attended, with good results. We have made over 500 calls. Sold many Bibles, etc. Brethren pray for us.—WM. H. VAN DEUSEN and WIFE, N. W. T., Seymour district evangelists.

Tyler.—Frederic F. Wyatt is in a meeting here.

Mesquite.—Dr. A. P. Terrell is preaching one Lord's day a month. We are trying to arrange to have him two Sundays.

VIRGINIA.

Pembroke, Giles County.—The writer has just closed a meeting here which resulted in 55 additions to the church, 40 by confession and baptism, seven from the Baptists, one from the Methodists, one or two from the Lutherans, two by letter and three or four who had fallen away reclaimed, besides five who made the confession and have not been baptized yet, and several reconsecrated that were not counted. The attendance was good, the attention splendid and the interest great throughout the meeting. This was due to the preparation made and work done by the pastor, E. C. Bragg, and the faithful work done by the personal workers in the meeting. This band of personal workers will continue their work, and the young people organized a Y. P. S. C. E. and went to work in earnest. We have some fine members here, some of the best people in the town, and the best church in town.—H. D. COFFEY.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Parkersburg, June 8.—Two confessions and one reclaimed yesterday. Reached apportionment for children's day.—J. D. HULL.

WISCONSIN.

Madison, June 9.—Eight added at Werley; seven baptized and one came from Methodists. One confession at Packwaukee. All the last month at regular services. Our organization in Madison has been accomplished, and we hope for great results.—ROLLA G. SEARS

Prophecies of Daniel and Revelation, by Robert Shaw, M. A. (Becktold & Company, 210-212 Pine St., St. Louis, Mo.)

This is a large volume of 826 pages and from the fact that it is now in its fourteenth edition there must have been a good demand for it. Whether that demand will continue is doubtful, if we read the signs of the times. The author covers a wide field in this development of the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation in history. He shows that he possesses much knowledge and some ingenuity, but the subject of his disquisition is one which we think would be more popular were it served in homeopathic doses. We may agree with the writer of this book that one great advantage of a proper and extended study of history in connection with religion is that it cannot fail to show to man his proper position in existence, what sort of a life he should live, etc., but to get people to read 800 large pages now that he has written them, seems to us to be this author's problem.

Weatherby's Inning, by Ralph H. Barbour. (D. Appleton & Co., New York, $1.20 net.)

This is particularly a boy's story, though many girls who are interested in our great national game will find great pleasure in following the course of the bright, manly hero through his first year at college. Through a misunderstanding the lad is charged with cowardice, and, being proud and sensitive, for a time his life is made almost unbearable. He decides, however, to live it down, and not only does so, but by his pluck and self reliance, as well as his prowess in the baseball field, succeeds in winning respect and many friends, as well as clearing himself from the charge laid against him. The author seems to be a baseball enthusiast, and his descriptions of the games are vivid with life and color.

Fifty Missionary Stories, compiled and arranged by Belle M. Brain. (Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago.)

Many of these stories have appeared in different periodicals. Their grouping together in one volume and their condensation in some instances, makes what ought to be a very helpful book for arousing a missionary interest. A pleasant half hour on several evenings' programs might be spent with this collection.

The Christian Endeavor Manual, by Francis E. Clark, D. D. (United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago.)

The purpose of this book is to condense into one comprehensive account the salient features of the Christian Endeavor movement and its active works. It is admirably conceived and well executed.

"Summer Time in Dixie" is the title of a popular song which is now the rage. The music, by Edwin Kendall, is the kind that strikes a popular chord. Price 25 cents. Apply to any music dealer.

HEDENBERG.

Mrs. Anna T. Underwood Hedenberg died May 24, 1904. Born in Wilmington, O., July 24, 1839, and married to E. Hedenberg, December 24, 1868, at Jacksonville, Ill. She was a charter member of this church. She endured prolonged suffering most patiently. DANIEL H. SHIELDS.
Salina, Kan.

HINCHMAN.

Minnie D. Loos was born February 21, 1834, in Worth, in the province of Alsace, at that time French territory, but ceded to Germany at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, in which two of her uncles had been killed. When she was less than two years old her father came to America to prepare a home for the family. In a short time he sent for them and the mother started with the five children and arrived safely, to find the husband and father on his deathbed. They settled first near Massillon, Franklin county, Ohio. Mrs. Loos was a very gifted woman and had been educated in medicine, which she practiced till her death. The family moved to Wellsburg, West Va., after a few years, in order to make it convenient for Charles Louis, an older son, to attend college at Bethany. After he had finished his course he became Pastor of the Church of Christ, in Somerset, Pa. While visiting him here, his sister Minnie met her future husband, James S. Hinchman. Mr. Hinchman became captain of Company A, 10th Pennsylvania Reserves, in our Civil war and was killed at the second Battle of Bull Run. After several years' residence in Minnesota, Mrs. Hinchman removed to Pittsburgh, where she lived for several years and where she was a charter member of the Central Christian Church. She had lived in New York City for about five years. She was devoted and loyal to her church and was active in all departments. Her chief work, however, was the distribution of Bibles and personal work among the people in the parks and on the lower East Side. Her death was sudden and unexpected on Monday evening, after a brief illness of less than a week. Among the surviving relatives are her two daughters in New York and her brother, Charles Louis Loos, so well known in our whole brotherhood and Professor for so many years in Lexington University. J. P. LICHTENBERGER.
New York.

LUCAS.

Dr. J. B., son of Dr. J. R. and Margaret Lucas, was born February 9, 1868, and died April 18, 1904, at his home in Marionville, Mo. He remained single, living with and caring for his aged parents, who survive him, with three sisters and one brother. He was a faithful Christian, with high ideals, always responding to every good work, and was loved by all who knew him. He was laid to rest at Clinton, Mo., by the side of two of his sisters. F. J. YORLEY.

MORRISON.

Mrs. Betsy J. Morrison died in Des Moines, Ia., May 17, 1904; aged 84 years. She was born in Sanborn, N. H., October 20, 1819, but had lived in Iowa nearly forty years. She had been a member of the Christian church for over sixty years.

SHIE.

"Gone Home."—John Richard Shie, born August 26, 1867, at Nashville, Tenn., studied logic, literature and the languages under Prof. T. P. Brewer, at the Brennon school, Nashville; entered the Baptist ministry and continued therein two years, then became a Disciple of Christ as pastor at San Bernardino, where he remained two years, and from a handful of Disciples he built up a splendid congregation; and from a small church he built one of the best church buildings in San Bernardino, completing and dedicating it to his Lord last February. He came to Long Beach to endeavor to rebuild his constitution, but at 2:45 o'clock this morning, a severe neuralgic pain struck his heart, causing almost instant death. To know him was to love him. He was one of God's noblemen. He leaves a wife and one child, also two step-children, Miss Elizabeth and Hallins Pardue. The work in Southern California will lose an earnest, zealous and untiring worker, the wife and children a devoted and loving husband and father. The Brotherhood and friends extend to them their deepest sympathy in this the darkest hour of their lives. Funeral services were held at the Broadway Christian Church, Los Angeles, May 28, F. M. Dowling, and Grant K. Lewis, officials.

UNDERWOOD.

C. R. Underwood died May 26, 1904. Born in Wilmington, O., January 6, 1825; came to Salina in 1869. He was a charter member of the church and served as elder over twenty-eight years. He was mayor of his city four terms, and had friends in every walk of life. DAVID H. SHIELDS.

Texas State Missionary Convention.

The brotherhood of Texas held their annual missionary convention on June 6 to 10 in the little city of Greenville. This town of about 8,000 people is located in the northern part of the state, not more than 50 miles south of Indian Territory and about 50 miles northeast of Dallas. The congregation with which the convention met is a very strong one and they have a large, well built house of worship. J. W. Holsapple, the pastor of the church, and the congregation were well prepared to do everything in their power to make the convention feel at home and enjoy the hospitality of a true and open hearted people. The first part of the convention was occupied by the Christian woman's board of missions of the state. They had a splendid program which was well rendered and indicated that our sisterhood in Texas were constrained by the love of Christ to sacrifice much for the cause of missions.

The Texas missionary work as reported by the state secretary, J. C. Mason, showed that 7,421 days were employed by the board, and the men thus employed preached 3,628 sermons; they had 1,401 confessions and baptisms, received 517 into the church from the denominations, and there were 987 accessions by letter and otherwise, making a total of 2,905 additions. They started 36 new churches and organized 44 Sunday-schools. The missionaries raised $15,942 cash for their own support. Money raised for other work $14,751. Pledges raised, $11,528. Thus a total in cash and pledges amounted to $42,291. All this work was done by only $4,872 passing through their state treasury. In other words, this small amount carried on and developed all the work above reported. Texas is certainly a great missionary field, as the above results indicate.

Bro. J. C. Mason, the present state secretary, has now been at work for one year, and the splendid work done indicates that the state missionary board was exceedingly fortunate in securing him for the great work that is being done. B. B. Sanders still continues in the field as one of the evangelists, and his splendid report to the convention shows a great year's work, as did all the other evangelists.

The addresses of the convention were strong and indicate a vigorous ministry in the state. The addresses were full of the spirit of Christ and indicated both a familiarity with the work in hand, its needs and the application of the word of God to present conditions in order that success and great results might be secured. The Texas brotherhood warmly and heartily endorses and approves the good work done by Pres. E. V. Zollars and the faculty of Texas Christian university, and likewise heartily stands by the Texas Christian Courier. The CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST has many warm friends among the brotherhood of Texas, and when they go outside of the state, or add a second religious journal to the home, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is certainly the favorite.

Among those we met at the convention who were formerly from Missouri and who are doing a good work in the state of Texas we mention A. J. Bush, S. K. Hallam, M. M. Davis, O. O. Felkner, George Lee Bush, J. A. Shop- taugh, W. A. Fite, J. S. Myers, H. R. Ford, O. A. Riall, W. H. Drummitt, Lawrence W. Scott, J. S. Stockard, L. D. Anderson, S. R. Ezzell, J. H. Fuller and several others whose names escape us now. All these formerly labored in Missouri and were at this convention. If this list from Missouri were extended to those who were not at the present convention, Missouri would certainly have a large showing in the present ministry of Texas.

Addresses delivered by national representatives from beyond the state were those of B. O. Aylsworth, Colorado; G. W. Muckley, Kansas City; Geo. L. Snively, St. Louis; G. L. Wharton, India, and G. B. Ranshaw, Cincinnati. G. L. Bush made a splendid presiding officer of the convention and J. W. Holsapple made a splendid host. The Widows' and Orphans' Home, presided over by A. J. Bush, is doing a fine work in its field, according to reports. Its assets seem to be over $20,000 above any liabilities. There was strong talk during the convention of becoming auxiliary to our National Benevolent association.

Taking it all in all, the Texas convention was a whole-souled, brotherly, fraternal gathering. Its business was dispensed with vigor, and dispatch and the strongest ties of sympathy and fellowship seemed to bind together the great brotherhood of Texas.

The church at Athena, Oregon, which is the first to become a living link, was organized in 1873. It met in Alkali school house on Wild Horse creek, so called by the Indians. This was the boundary line of the Umatilla Indian reservation. The congregation built their first house of worship in 1880. Having outgrown this they built their present house in 1902 and it was dedicated March 22, 1903, by S. M. Martin; the result of the Martin meeting was 103 additions. On Dec.

13 we secured the services of Bro. W. A. Moore, kindly loaned us by the state Bible-school board of Missouri through the holidays. This meeting was a grand surprise, resulting in 153 additions. Many thanks to our Missouri brethren. J. W. Jenkins is our present pastor and he is leading us on to new victories. The accompanying cut shows the house where Martin and Moore held their great meetings, and this in a town of only about 1,000 inhabitants.

"The Bridal of the Seas."

By Julia W. Michael.

A nuptial feast is spreading
On Panama's far shore,
With such a show of bounty
As ne'er has been before.
The bright and fair Pacific
The bonny bride will be
Who weds the proud Atlantic,
The restless Eastern sea.

He's coming on to claim her,
The wedding garment's spun
Of opalescent wave-crests
Ashimmer in the sun.
The mist that hides the hilltops
Will be the wedding veil,
All caught with pearls and coral
And laced with sea ferns pale.

A shore of snowy whiteness
Will be the altar rail,
Banked deep with palms and roses
And hung with orchids frail.
The wind, who loves the oceans,
The wedding march will play
Upon the strings of heaven,
Just at the dawn of day.

The nations will be bidden
From ev'ry foreign shore,
And echoes of the wassail
Will ring for evermore:
For chosen from these nations
Our own shall tie the band
That joins these eager oceans
Across the neck of land.

Safeguarding a Child's Purity.

By the Author of the Note-Book of An Adopted Mother.

Nearly every mother whose children have grown from babyhood to school age, finds with a pang that they are hearing and seeing things which are impure and degrading. That is to say, she does if she is a vigilant mother and one who keeps the confidence of her children. If she is one of those unfortunately optimistic parents who feel their children safe anywhere and so is not on the alert, her peace of mind may remain unbroken; or if she is one who does not invite confidences, she may still possess that ignorance which is bliss.

Suppose she is a young mother, prepared by no training for the duties of maternity and restrained by the conventions of past generations from discussing her perplexity with others, what is she to do? In the hope that one mother's experience may be helpful to others, this article is written.

My sons are adopted children, the younger of whom is now about seven years old. He came to us with his mind unsullied, a strong, manly, upright child of five. The other was eight when we took him and had already heard much that was impure. Before he came the younger boy had heard from me in a wholesome and matter-of-fact way the story of birth. I would hardly have chosen to tell it so early, but he saw and heard something on a farm which forced the situation. Although he had been warned by a playmate not to tell his mother, the habit of opening his heart and mind to me was so strong that he disregarded the injunction as soon as he got home, beginning cautiously and talking freely when he found that it was safe. He sat on my lap and I explained to him that it was not a matter to be discussed with other children, but that he could speak of it at any time to his father and me. I also told him that mothers knew much more about such things than boys, and that whenever he wished to understand anything better, he should ask me and I would try to explain it to him.

When the older boy came, he was evidently full of the idea that a mother was to be kept all at bay. A boy was to mind her, or at least to make her think that he did; in her presence he must appear to be respectful, gentle and innocent; what he said or did behind her back did not matter, so long as he was not found out. He was not a boy of vicious nature. On the contrary, he had a clean and wholesome heart and an unusually fine mind, but he was encrusted, if one may so express it, with wrong habits of thought and action. The two children were brothers and devoted to each other, in spite of long separation. It was a question which would influence the other, and the younger one had his parents' help and prayers on his side.

I knew from a conversation between the two, which I overheard, that the older could not be persuaded that it was safe to attempt confidential relations with me. I knew, too, that he was sharing some things he had learned with his little brother, who would come and repeat them to me. I was very glad when the chance came one day, as we were examining some tiny deer mice, to speak in the most matter-of-fact way of their pre-natal life. The older boy looked scared and turned away his head. I looked at the mice in my hand while I said, "You knew, didn't you, dear, about such things?"

He hesitated and the younger boy nodded reassuringly. "Why don't you tell her?" he cried. "It's always right to talk about things to your mother."

Then there was a frightened assent, and I went on to speak of some of the wonders of early nutrition until there was a comfortable break in the dangerous barrier of reserve. Then I changed the subject, feeling that he would soon make his own advances to confidential relations with me, and I was not mistaken.

My boys are still little boys. I can not be sure what the coming years may bring, but I know that at present they are pure and wholesome in purpose, not removed from the impurity of this world, but fighting contamination as wisely as they can and telling their mother what most children exert themselves to hide.

Not many weeks ago the elder boy called me into their room as I was leaving, after tucking them in safely for the night. "Mother," he said, "I wish you'd tell me how I can keep from thinking of the bad things the boys at school say. Somehow, when they're in my mind, I can't help thinking about them."

Now if there ever is a time when my words fall on respectfully attentive ears it is at bedtime, when the distractions of the day are over and the evening prayer has begotten a sweet seriousness in my two exceedingly active boys. So I ignored the waiting engagement and sat down on the foot of the older boy's bed.

"Which do you like best," I asked, "English sparrows or wrens?"

"Wrens, of course," said the boys.

"If you had a bird house with room in it for just one pair of birds, you would rather have wrens than English sparrows?"

"Course!"

"Pretend your mind is a bird house, and when there are sparrows in it turn them out. If the bird house is empty, they will come back and build again. Get some wrens quickly to live there, and the sparrows will stay away. They are the bad thoughts, you know, and the wrens are the good ones."

This illustration appealed to the boys because we see a yearly struggle between wrens and sparrows for a bird house on our place. Then I told them the story of King John and the Abbess Ana, with the quick and true retort of the abbess:

"We cannot hinder the passing
Of a wild-winged bird overhead;
But well may we keep her from building
Her nest in our garden," she said.

In telling I was careful to adapt it to their understanding, and they were much interested and amused by these lines, which they repeated after me.

"But how can I make myself think good thoughts?" persisted the elder boy.

"Pretend you are taking a railroad trip, and think what you can see from the car windows," I suggested, "or read in one of your books or do some work just as hard as you can."

"I don't see why you need to ask mother such questions when she is tired," remarked the younger boy indignantly, sitting bolt upright in his bed. "There's lots of interesting things to think about. You might make believe you are a frog. I like to do that."

Both boys say, "It isn't any fun to think or say low things. Only," they added, "some of the boys say them when we are around, and then we can't forget."

The older boy once asked a question and answered it himself as follows: "Who invented all the bad words? Perhaps it was Cain. I suppose he was about the worst man, and he lived so long ago he could get them started."

This suggested heroic measures to the younger brother, and he said: "I tell you what I think would be a good thing, mother. Just kill all the bad people, and then there wouldn't be anybody to spoil our being good, don't you see?" I am not sure that I made them understand that moral fiber comes by resistance of evil, not by isolation from it, but I did my best. Poor little victims of the depravity of others! How much vigilance and skill is required of parents to rob such evils of their fascination! And how necessary it is that the first childish attempts at conversation about things should not be discouraged by scathing rebukes or a simple injunction not to talk about "such dreadful things." My little boy was right when he added to a remark of mine that "it is God who makes people good," "Y-yes, I know it's God, but mothers help a lot!"

Why Railroads Demand Sobriety.

The ease with which a misplaced switch, a misread message, a loosened spike, an undelivered telegram, can send a railroad train crashing into another demands a caution, a clearness of vision and mind unsurpassed by any other calling. From the Grand Central station in New York alone 464 trains dash in or out every day, a train for every three minutes of the twenty-four hours. The passenger enters the Pullman knowing absolutely that his life is in the keeping of others, yet he goes to sleep with precisely the same assurance of safety as if in his own home. In fact accident insurance companies consider "traveling men" as "preferred risk," and insure them against disaster where they refuse altogether or demand higher rates for risks on a farmer or mechanic. Only about one passenger is killed for every 2,000,000 passengers carried, a ratio of improvement over the records of ten years ago by above thirty-three per cent. Yet despite this low rate, the enormous amount of traffic is such that, during the statistical year 1902, 8,588 persons were killed and 64,662 injured. While the ratio of persons killed or injured in proportion to the traffic is constantly decreasing, the volume of traffic is increasing so rapidly that the actual total of killed and wounded steadily increases.

Aside from the hundreds of thousands of dollars in destroyed property, these accidents involve the railways in heavy expenses for damages, litigation and attorney's fees. Without discussing the causes, it will not be disputed that the average citizen is prone to look upon the railways as legitimate prey for schemes that would not be tolerated in dealings with a private citizen, and that the average jury is prone to decide doubtful questions in favor of the plaintiff, widow or cripple.

Each dollar paid out in damages or in loss for wreckage, represents earned money paid out for avoidable purposes. For if there had been no misplaced switch, if there had been no misread message, and if there had been no other "ifs," there would have been no accident and the cost thereof would have gone to swell the dividends, the sole purpose for which the railways are operated.

Dividends are the nerve centers of railway management and whatever affects the dividends is sure to command immediate and searching attention. The operating management that can show the least proportion of avoidable expenditures, that can develop the promptest and most satisfactory service to its customers, wins the approval at the annual meetings. The first essential to such a service and such a success is clear heads and steady hands in the operating department, in which the wine glass has no place. This is the basis and reason for the recently developed stringent regulations as to the use of intoxicants which now pertain in all of the railways of the country.—W. E. Johnson in the June Chautauquan.

A Story of Admiral Dewey.

"The souvenirs which have pleased me most," said Admiral Dewey to a friend, "have been those which the little folks have sent me. The admiration of the children is unalloyed and genuine, and their gifts are so original."

The admiral's correspondence with his little admirers would make an interesting story of itself, and it would be one that would show his big, kind heart as probably nothing else could. At the time of the Manila victory there was a young lad in Brooklyn, who for many months had been flat on his back with that most cruel of afflictions, hip disease. From the battle of Manila he read every word he could find about "Commodore" Dewey, and kept a close tab on his movements. It was a crushing disappointment to the little fellow that he would not be able to see his hero when he came to Brooklyn a few months after his return from the far east. He felt it so keenly, that, without telling him that he had done so, his father wrote Admiral Dewey, explaining the case and asking whether, if he should bring a carriage, the admiral could spare the time to ride over to his house. In the program which had been arranged for him there was not a moment at his disposal, but with his own hand the admiral wrote a letter expressing his regret and inclosing an autograph picture for the boy.—May Woman's Home Companion.

Vacation Plans With Suggestions.

April and May brought me a great many letters from anxious mothers in different parts of the country, asking questions about the healthfulness of different resorts, wanting suggestions as to their children's summer clothes, and also remedies for the ordinary summer maladies. It seemed to me to be quite as easy to answer all these queries in one set article, as to divide up my page with questions and answers. What is good for one mother in the way of advice, will probably be helpful to another who didn't think to ask the question which may be answered here.

Of course, the private schools close in June, the early part of the month, and the public schools steal a little time from the end of the beautiful June, which every child, by rights, should spend in the country. Our public school year is too long, and if the little folks, and big folks, too, could be turned loose through June, July and August, we should probably have stronger men and women, and the coming race might be physically very much improved. I have no right to say only physically, because there is mental and spiritual growth, when any human soul communes with God as he is shown in nature and in his works. It seems to me the whole trend of life nowadays is too much toward "strenuousness," whether in work or study, the play of little people or the pleasures of the older folks. We take nothing moderately. We are always anxious to do a little more, and so, burning the candle at both ends, find ourselves less exceptionally endowed, feeble folk at fifty. I was perfectly appalled when I read the statement that a bishop should be retired at forty-five from a church position; that a clergyman is superannuated before he reaches five decades, and an unhappy business man who may have lost his anchorage and seeks for other employment, is told there is no room for him except at the bottom of the ladder, and indeed little chance then, because, forsooth, the business of today demands the energy of youth. It also demands that pliability which can come from inexperience. The heads of our great business houses wish to mold a man according to their own ideals, and the initiative is not wanted. More is the pity, for experience, after failure even, might present better methods.

So I plead most earnestly for longer vacations and greater recreation, that men and women may gather force to accomplish all that must be accomplished in the pathetically little time in which it is considered proper for them to work. It seems almost foolish for our boards of health to struggle so earnestly for hygienic environment, to pursue so energetically every possible means which shall mitigate disease and prolong life, when that prolongation of life means so little to the business man who is unfortunate enough to have a clerical position, or to the clergyman who through years of intimate relation with his flock, has come to know the heights and depths of human temptations and human aspirations, and feels himself well fitted to counsel, to reprove, to encourage—oh, the pity of it, the grave unwisdom of our modern method.—Julia Holmes Smith, M. D., in The Pilgrim for June.

A Race Unable to Walk.

The administrator of New Guinea has recently reported that a tribe has been found which is virtually incapable of walking. These people inhabit a marshy district which is too soft to walk in and too solid to allow of navigation in a canoe. Locomotion of any kind is thus impossible, and they have become a purely sedentary race, leading a stationary existence in the dwellings which they have built in the trees just above the level of the swamps. It would be natural to expect, under these circumstances, that they would gradually lose the use of the limbs and muscles employed in walking. This result has actually come about. They cannot perambulate on hard ground without causing their feet to bleed with the unusual exercise. Their extremities have shrunk, while the trunk has become bloated.—Leslie's Weekly.

Modern Warfare Not Deadly.

If armies were now to fight in such close order and at such close quarters as they used to do in ancient times, the slaughter would unquestionably exceed anything of which history gives record. But in direct proportion as the rapidity of fire and range of guns are increased, the distance between contending armies is increased. When guns are made to shoot further and with greater accuracy and rapidity, those against whom their fire is directed are removed so far out of range that it is the rare exception, not the rule, that a shot finds a human target. It is estimated that not one in a thousand of the rifle-balls fired in a modern battle hits anybody, and when there is a hit, the chance of the wound's being fatal are not more than one in five, for the vital area of a man when presented as a target to a rifle-ball is not more than twenty per cent of the total area exposed, so that out of one hundred hits eighty are in non-vital parts.

Official figures show that a very small percentage of the wounded die in modern warfare. According to recent statistics, more than eighty-five per cent of the wounded recover, and about one-third of the deaths from wounds occur before relief reaches the sufferers on the field. Of course, if it were not for the valuable service of the ambulance corps, Red Cross societies and the wonderful skill of present-day surgeons the loss of life would be far greater. — May Woman's Home Companion.

The Green Witch.

CHAPTER XIV.

George returned to his seat in the car, his face glowing from the pleasure Flora had given by coming to bid him farewell. For a moment the cause of his journey slipped from his mind, and he was conscious only of a sunny face upturned to the dying sunlight, with blushes rising in the delicate cheeks, with sparkles of spirit light in the great blue eyes. Then the beautiful vision passed, and he saw his wan, emaciated father lying upon his death-bed, longing for the coming of his only child. So many days, so many weary nights he had watched beside the invalid, George could see, as if with actual eyes, the long, thin profile, the tossing arms, the iron-gray hair above the black, deep-set eyes. His aunt Martha he had never seen. He was trying to imagine her features when the train gave a violent jerk and quickly came to a standstill. On either side of the track stretched a wild wood. The spot was about seven miles from Burr City. The sun had already set, and the short October twilight had begun its gentle reign.

George, hearing windows raised on both sides of the aisle, threw up his, and the shrill cries of insects seemed to triumph over the silenced song of the motionless engine. Men began to ask each other what was the matter, and then to leave the car on tours of inspection. Presently the news came that just ahead a wrecked freight train lay upon the rails, and the passenger-train had been halted by a red lantern. Most of the travelers, among them George Clayton, left the cars and walked up the track. They found that spreading rails had caused the freight-engine to run off down an embankment, carrying two flat-cars with it and heaping others upon the road in bewildering confusion. Some of the crew had already hurried ahead to the next town, to telegraph for assistance.

The travelers were presently ordered aboard, and the passenger-train was run backwards to the switch, some two miles from the wreck, and five miles from Burr City. Then the engine backed on the mainroad to Burr City for instructions. The travelers joked and quarreled whimsically, and became suddenly acquainted with each other after the American manner. Every one knew at least one town known to someone else, or had passed through the town and could abuse it intelligently. When the engine returned from Burr City the travelers learned that the road could not be cleared for at least four hours, and during these four hours, the train would wait at the switch.

When George heard this he sought the conductor and inquired, "If I leave the train and am gone two or three hours, will I run any danger of being left?"

"You'd better stay," said the conductor, who had been greatly annoyed by the good-humored bantering of the travelers.

Individual Communion Cups

SANITARY

Why do you permit a custom at the communion table which you would not tolerate in your own home? The use of the individual communion service grows daily. Are you open to conviction? Would you like to see a list of the churches in which it is used and know the satisfaction it gives?

COMMUNION OUTFIT CO., Dept. A Rochester, N. Y.

"It is very important that I should be gone for awhile," George replied.

"Then why did you board this train?" demanded the other. "Why didn't you wait till to-morrow?"

"I must go as soon as possible," said George, mildly, "but as it's not possible to leave now, there is something else I should do."

"I haven't any time to waste on you," said the conductor, turning away impatiently.

"Then it will be safe for me to leave?"

The conductor did not reply. He strode away.

George sought the engineer. "Will you please tell me if it will be safe for me to go away for two or three hours?"

The engineer, who sat at his window holding a conversation with his fireman about "the night they dropped in at Taddy's when Buck Simms was high," turned toward George irritably. "Now I ain't runnin' this engine to be badgered to death with questions," he cried fiercely. "I can't stand it, and I ain't a-goin' to. If you stay on this train, you'll git where you've paid to git."

The fireman said, "But didn't Buck Simms beat the record when he grabbed the high silk hat and told Sally to come on!"

"First one person, then another," growled the engineer, "has beset me with 'How long?' and 'How long?' and 'How long?' till I'm desperate, and I can't stand it, an' I ain't a-goin' to!"

George turned away.

"And I ain't a-goin' to," the engineer called after him, with a good deal of spirit. George met the porter as he was returning to his coach, and made the same inquiry.

"Ask de conductah," said the porter, swelling with importance. At that moment he heard the conductor call to one of the baggage-men, "Yes, it'll be four hours, at least, maybe longer." That decided him.

The train had stopped not farther than a mile from the cattle-shed, where the inverted barrel contained the mysterious blank book. After all, he could enter Spot's name, and save him from exposure for at least another week. He followed the track in the direction of Burr City till he reached the place where it was crossed by a country road. Leaving the track, he entered the wood, enjoying the delicious softness of the October warmth. The trees were, for the most part, stripped of leaves, but here and there sturdy warriors stood out against the ruthless hand of autumn, clinging to their green robes. The ground was hidden by a carpet of leaves, which seemed full of whispers as he walked. Tall white-stemmed weeds snapped short as his weight was borne upon them, and bowed, at once their lofty heads which they had held so regally that one thought not of their hollow hearts. As the breeze stirred the leaves which clung still green, but paling, high in air, those upon the ground stirred and sang also, a message of warning and of soft regret to the living from the dead.

As the switch lay on the side of the cattle-shed opposite the waterfall, George came first to the building. He knew that he had ample time for his enterprise, but the thought of the train standing with its face toward the south made him hurried and excited. He lit the lantern, and wrote Spot Stoner's name. As he added the date, he heard a voice from the direction of the waterfall. It was Marget, singing. George experienced a feeling of gratitude for events which had so unexpectedly made a meeting with the girl possible. Now he could appeal to her not to bring disgrace upon his friend. In the impatient relief of discovering Marget's nearness, he ran from the shed, leaving the lantern burning upon the barrel. As he neared the clearing, his feet grew slow, while the charm of her wonderful voice once more conquered him, robbing him of unkind thoughts, and bringing tears to his eyes. He reached the open space without discovery. It was long before the moon would rise. The sky looked black in its deep calm, and the stars burned and quivered and laughed—they were lords of the night. A faint, soft, peaceful starlight rendered objects half-visible in bulk, but outlines were merged in obscurity. Marget was singing to the waterfall, and as her voice changed to its deeps and shallows, she seemed to George a witch, indeed. Her form was vague and unreal in the semi-gloom, and a mass of leaves upon her head gave even to it a fantastic shape. She was singing an operatic air known to the listener as "Hear Me, Norma." To the tune, she had made up words to suit her fancy. The poetry of her invention had no other merit than to reveal the thoughts and passions of her soul. They were the meaning of her life. Sung by another, they would have been lifeless. Perhaps the emotion which she threw into them was one secret of her power. But, indeed, the greater secret of the influence she exerted by her singing may be explained by one word which, after all, explains nothing—Genius.

This was the girl's song, as she sat in the vague light, her face upturned to the stars:

"Hear us, Marget, for thee we're calling.
We are the voices of hope and love and fame.
We are calling thee out of thy darkened life Into the sunshine of beauty, where thou canst make a name."

"They are the fairies; O how well I know them!

Swiftly I'd follow, if I could find the way.
Lead me, sweet voices, out of the dreary shadow;

Lead, fairy voices, into the white, strong day.

Fairy voices calling—golden lights are flashing,
Heavy chains are binding me to the cruel earth.

Ah, no, never."

Her voice ceased and George heard her sob. Then came a low wail of desolate loneliness.

Business Notes.

For recitations of all kinds, in children's day exercises, there is nothing better than the Choral Festival, and we will send you one for 50 cents.

"Walks and Words" of Jesus, a simple story of the life of Christ in the exact wording of the gospel is very interesting, and in cloth, 50 cents.

We have some very pretty wall mottos, which would be just the thing for decorating the church on children's day, selling at 25 cents each, by 10.

The surprise is complete as our friends read over the present list of "Bargain" Books, for these are not "copyright expired," but books of which we have too many, hence the offer.

The calls are coming for the American Standard Bible, 45 cents and testament, 20 cents, prepaid, but we have more of the English American Revised at 7 cents, limp, 15 cents, cloth, and 35 cents, large primer, prepaid.

"Ways of Working," a clear, precise presentation of how some C. E. and other church workers can honor their Master. You will be pleased with it and we are going to help the cause by putting them out at ten cents each.

"Pedobaptism, is it from Heaven or of Men?" by J. M. Frost, Jr., is in good demand in many quarters, and as such, is worth first price, but you may have what few are left at 50 cents each; only, do not forget, first come, first served, as we have not more than twelve.

Let us have a clear understanding, as some of our friends did not on the last list; this offer is just for 30 days or until stock is exhausted. Unless the books are found in other lists that follow, the "bargain" price is off and the regular price restored. "Understand?" On with the sale!

Many are ordering the Half-Hour Studies at the Cross, 75 cents, and making just the use of it at the communion service that Brother Garrison desired. One in ordering says, "Wish I had had the assistance of this good book long ago." Every chapter meets just that want for those who "wait on the table."

But for C. E. wall mottoes, in the girls' rooms at home, and the boys' rooms, too, we can furnish an exceptionally pretty line; green, blue, pink and lilac, with various scripture quotations on the finest silk, banner and tassel form. These goods cannot be adequately described, but are very reasonable at 35 cents.

F. M. McHale, Herington, Kas., who seems to have a cinch on that character of business in his district, writes us that the Wedding Tokens and Wedding Blossoms are much nicer for "marriage certificates" than the old style. We keep all kinds, as the slower folks have not yet caught on to the booklet certificate idea, but they will. Booklets, 35 and 50 cents.

"Wisdom is justified of her children," and the wise ones coming to the World's Fair, and more so those who are likely to remain at home, who wish to be thoroughly in touch with the Fair, location of buildings, points and places of interest in the city, etc., are getting a new subscriber for the Young Folks at 75 cents and receiving a copy of that handsome souvenir, without which you are in much confusion, but it's your fault if you are.

So many are using the "Life of Raccoon John Smith," in mission work among their friends that we have decided to continue the sale of this $2.00 book at 50 cents for another 30 days. One brother ordered an even dozen to be so used, while another was so pleased with the good work of one that he ordered another for the same good purpose, and a third said, send one in a hurry, for I hope to do good with it this week during our meeting. Good!

"The future, after all, will not usher in so great a change as some imagine. This mortal must put on immortality, but we will hold to the types of character which we have formed here. It may be that we take up our future life very much at the place where we lay down the present." Dr. W. T. Moore's very suggestive treatment of this subject in "Man Preparing for Other Worlds" (500 pages, crown, 8vo, $2), is but a part of an exhaustive analysis of the spiritual man's career. It is the most original book written on this subject.

The Positive Note in Preaching

PREACH what you know of man's needs and God's grace, of brotherhood, of righteousness, of sonship in the kingdom of God, and leave your questionings and doubts, your processes and debates, for your hours of study and the companionship of your books. Let your preaching be the strong, affirmative, positive message of your Master, who met the needs of His age, and of all ages, with a declaration of the simple and eternal verities of the life of faith and sonship. . . . If you carry the processes of your study, however interesting in themselves, into your pulpits, you will fail to reach men. You are not to be Christian essayists; you are to help men and women smitten with very ancient and homely sins, pressed upon by very common temptations, and suffering the sorrows that are as old as humanity, yet as fresh as every new wrench that tears human companionships asunder and wrecks hopes dear to men and women. Do not go before your congregation without some message for those on life's common, dusty road. Have something which may make the man or woman burdened with common toils and humble worries, and the universal griefs, look up and feel that God is over all and in all, and that He has spoken to them through your word.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Milk pails, pans and other utensils of the dairy should be kept perfectly clean and free from taint. Common yellow soaps should never be used for washing these, as such soaps contain rosin, are sticky and will leave a disagreeable odor. Ivory Soap is pure, it is made of sweet, clean materials and rinses readily.

To cleanse dairy utensils: dissolve Ivory Soap in warm water, then wash the utensils and rinse well.

The Louisiana State Convention.

I have attended larger conventions than the one that closed in Alexandria, La., June 16, but never a more inspiring one. Louisiana Disciples believe in God and venture in faith. In 1903 the Baton Rouge convent on adjourned to meet in 1904 with the First Christian church of Alexandria. At that time there was no Christian church in Alexandria. But Evangelist J. L. Haddock and wife preceded the convention a few weeks and at convention time there was an excellent First Christian church here to receive us, and during the convention a handsome sum of money was gathered to build a modern church home for the young congregation.

This convention adjourned to meet next year with the First Christian church at Munroe. So far as known there is but one member of the Christian church in Munroe, but Haddock and wife are going on before and there will be a live church there to receive the convention in 1905. The Foreign and Home missionary societies, Church extension and Texas Christian university had brilliant representations by G. L. Wharton, Geo. Ranshaw, R. R. Hamlin and E. V. Zollars. The plea of our National benevolent association was presented by the writer. Unfortunately none of the C. W. B. M. officers or speakers could attend.

B. B. Sanders preached a sermon of wonderful power on "Our Plea" at the closing session. This was followed by five confessions. The presence and songs of Sister Princess Long were an unceasing inspiration.

When the war is ended and this generation is rejoicing in Immanuel's land, no brighter laurels will be worn by any than those adorning the brows of Louisiana heroes of the faith—the Thorntons, Scotts, Stephens, Jones, Browns, Haddocks, Houchins, Laneharts and others whom it is our priceless privilege to know.

Current Events

The appointment of Attorney-General Knox to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Quay in the United States senate is a distinct gain to that body. Even those who are inclined to think that Mr. Knox was a trifle short-winded in his fight against the trusts, and that his administration of his department has helped rather than hindered them, will concede that he is an upright and able man of senatorial caliber both in ability and in rectitude. It is stated that Mr. Moody, secretary of war, will probably be transferred to the office vacated by Mr. Knox. It seems almost certain, at this writing, that Mr. Cortelyou will resign from the cabinet as secretary of commerce to become chairman of the Republican national committee. Though the old wheel-horses of the party would like to see a more experienced politician in the place, they are not likely to stand out against the President's known desire. This will leave two cabinet vacancies, one of which will probably be filled by the appointment of Congressman Victor H. Metcalf, of California.

The Republican nominating convention is in session this week in Chicago. Its work will be done before these lines are read, but now it is just beginning. Only two points are sufficiently uncertain to excite much interest. One is the attitude which the platform will take on the tariff, and the other is the nomination for the vice-presidency. As to the former point, the chances are strongly in favor of "standing pat" on the protective policy, with no hint about revision or reciprocity. The vice-presidency seems about to fall upon Senator Fairbanks, of Indiana, whether he wants it or not. A day or two before the convention met, there was a brief and vigorous revival of the Cannon boom, especially by the New York delegation. But Mr. Cannon himself spiked this gun by repeating with added emphasis his assertion that he would not accept the nomination. Mr. Fairbanks says he is not a candidate, but gives reason for believing that he will accept if the nomination is offered to him. Some criticisms have been passed upon his refusal to either openly declare his candidacy or positively decline to have his name mentioned. But his attitude is a perfectly consistent one. He does not want the office. He prefers the senate and the Indiana leaders prefer to have him stay in the senate, to prevent the scramble which would be sure to ensue for his vacant seat. But if the convention thinks he is the man for the vice-presidency he is willing to accept it. In a country where we say that the office should seek the man, it ought not to be considered that a man is disqualifying himself by maintaining this attitude.

It is folly for the average citizen, dependent upon the newspapers for his information, to try to pass any very dogmatic judgment upon the parties in the Colorado labor trouble. It is a case for divided sympathies. It is impossible to regard some of the acts committed in the name and by the influence of the Western federation of miners as other than outrageous. It is equally impossible not to feel that some of the measures of repression have been dangerous and illegal. In a state of affairs such as that which brought about the explosion at Independence and the loss of a dozen lives, almost certainly the deliberate work of strikers and their sympathizers, the governor is justified in using all the force that he can summon to protect life and property. But it is hard to see where he will find his justification for shipping trainloads of miners to Kansas and New Mexico and ordering them not to return to Colorado. No state has a right to unload its criminals or dangerous characters upon another state, and if these deported miners are not dangerous characters there is no reason for disturbing them at all.

The federal courts have at last taken up the Moyer case. It will be remembered that in April Governor Peabody caused the arrest of Charles H. Moyer, president of the Western federation of miners, and successfully resisted the attempt to bring the case into the courts, on the ground that a state of insurrection existed, and the writ of habeas corpus was suspended. The supreme court of Colorado denied an application for Moyer's release on bail, and later, on June 6, rendered a decision sustaining the governor in his attitude toward the writ of habeas corpus. A week later, however, Judge Thayer, of the federal court at St.

Louis, granted a writ summoning the governor to appear with Mr. Moyer and show cause why the latter should be deprived of his liberty. This marks the success of the miners in their effort of several months to get their case into a federal court.

The payment for pensions is the greatest single expense of the United States government. Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, secretary of the treasury, has tabulated the expenditures of the United States for the last fiscal year. Here are some of the figures:

It is better to pay our citizens who have fought for the nation than to pay for war munitions and equipment. And yet the pension list is one that the nation will some day have to tackle, for it has been and is being abused.

It is hard to realize—so meager have been the details with which we have been furnished—that the Russo-Japanese war has been in progress nineteen weeks. The latest news, which seems probably true, is that Port Arthur is cut off and is near to falling. Carnage has been the feature of the past week. In a battle on the Liao Tung peninsula between the contending forces north of Port Arthur every estimate points to the loss of 2000 men to the Russians and 1000 on the Japanese side. Meanwhile the Vladivostok fleet has entered the scene of action again and attacked two Japanese transports and caused the loss of about a thousand lives. In the land battle, which was waged for three days at Vafangau, the Japanese were victors and Gen. Stackelberg was compelled to retreat by train from Telissu to Vantsiatin. The Japanese were getting the worst of it, according to the Russian version, when Gen. Nodzu, the Japanese commander, received re-enforcements. His army of 60,000 men is now resting, while it is asserted that another force of 20,000 is pressing against the Russian army from the other side. The Russians declare this situation draws the enemy away from Port Arthur. The Vladivostok fleet sunk the transport Hitachi and damaged the transport Sadi in the straits of Korea after nearly all on board had escaped in boats. Many of those on the Hitachi committed suicide when death or capture seemed certain. The survivors have reached Japan. It is reported that the Vladivostok squadron also sunk a Japanese warship, but this is not verified, and the fleet is still at sea. Civilians have been warned to leave Vladivostok. One officer and eighteen men on the Japanese transport Taihoku were killed by the explosion of a mine at the entrance to Port Arthur June 13.

The World's Fair city has gained undesirable notoriety through two shooting-scrapes that will, in the outside public's mind, be directly associated with the exposition, though the exposition authorities can hardly be held to blame. Shortly after the bull-ring, which was entirely distinct from the exposition and its officials, had been destroyed, one of its employes shot and killed another. Another shooting affair has just occurred within the exposition grounds, among the employes of one of the Pike concessions. It is to be hoped that there will be punishment where punishment is due. St. Louis must be rid of fiery-tempered cow-men, as well as thugs and boodlers.

The summons of to-day is to do the work of God in the position you are in. The call comes to convert your desks, anvils, plows, counters, homes, into pulpits for the preaching of Christ's gospel. To take hold of any reasonable opportunity and any method that will produce true fruit is our duty. A novel method of recruiting a Sunday-school was recently adopted in a village of 500 inhabitants in New York, which might, with profit, be tried in other places with a view of increasing interest in the Sunday-school. The scholars were separated into two sides and each Sunday for twelve consecutive weeks the attendance of a scholar counted one point for his side. The side which at the close of the contest had the fewer points provided an entertainment for the visitors. The enrollment during the twelve Sundays rose from 56 to 533; the attendance from 56 to 431; the new scholars from 18 to 137.

There is a verse in the Bible which bids us to be not righteous overmuch. It is a text much controverted by commentators. But in practical living we do not find much use for it other than a warning to certain strivers for the mint, anise and cummin and neglecters of weightier matters. It is not doctrinal fastidiousness that this age needs so much as the righteousness that exalts a nation. Is it not a fact that one of the causes for the decay of family worship and its large neglect to-day has been that too often it was perfunctory and lacking in real religious spirit? The maintenance of family worship is the object of a league recently formed in England with the Rev. F. B. Meyer as its president. Yet with all Mr. Meyer's deep piety, after an existence of six months, the league reports an enrollment of only 44 families. That is discouraging. What is the cause?

There are very good reasons why ministers of the gospel should receive certain privileges from great corporations such as railroads. And in this country this has been recognized. Half-fare permits are granted on nearly all lines to authorized preachers. Unfortunately there are some wolves in sheep's clothing and some ministers who are not as punctilious and careful as they ought to be. And it is due to them that thousands of preachers in America are to have their usual permits restricted next year. For the committee of the passenger association has decided to make important changes in the arrangements for clergy certificates for the year 1905. At present 55,000 clergymen are using permits which are good west of Chicago and St. Louis for any distance. These certificates have been subjected to more or less abuse and manipulation by brokers. Accordingly the certificates of 1905 will be good for all distances up to a point where the rate is $20. Beyond that special permits will be necessary.

For some time it has been noised abroad that Mr. Campbell Morgan would probably return again permanently to London. That rumor has just been confirmed in a cablegram which Mr. W. R. Moody has received announcing that Mr. Morgan has accepted a call to become pastor of Westminster chapel. Mr. Morgan says he will return to America and assist in the summer conference at Northfield and commence work in London in the fall. We are not much surprised that Mr. Morgan returns to his own country. His work here has been much more exacting and wearying than the work of a regular pastorate, but in his newly chosen field of labor he will have a far more difficult work than he has yet undertaken. Westminster chapel is one of the largest edifices of the Congregational body in the great metropolis, and has long been called "Congregationalists' white elephant," because nobody could be found who could fill its great auditorium and hold a congregation. It is in the very heart of Mayfair, London's aristocratic quarter, and of course the Church of England has hold there. Westminster Abbey is not many blocks away. Mr. Morgan succeeded very well in the quiet suburban district and in a comparatively small church. It was Mr. Moody who made him famous, as association with the great evangelist has made so many other men famous. But Mr. Morgan has real natural ability, and if any man can succeed at Westminster chapel, other than a genius like Dr. Parker, it will be Mr. Morgan.

The separation of church and state is one of the mooted questions in many European countries. In France it is just now a very live problem, and the French government's solution of it will be watched with great interest. For the danger there is that in casting out the Catholic church and restricting her opportunities, France may increase her atheistic and irreligious tendencies. But those who are inclined to take a pessimistic view must remember that there are still nearly 2,000,000 Protestants in the country, and that such leaven will continue to work. An interesting article has just appeared in a Parisian review from the pen of M. Guerlac, which shows a traveled Frenchman's view of religious ideas abroad. He says it is worth while to study the workings of the church without the intervention of the state in the "country of classic religious liberty"—the United States. We quote as follows:

"The principle of the secularization of the state rests on a certain number of axioms which everyone in the United States accepts. They believe that religion is a phenomenon of individual mentality, and not a public service; that the state has no more occasion to regulate religion than it has to regulate poetry, mathematics, boxing or cornet-playing; and that everyone must be left free to practice it or abstain from it as he may see fit. The state has, in fact, no more right to approach ministers to perform the offices of this or that ritual, or to recommend the particular study of such and such a book of texts, than it would have to pay acrobats, painters or poets in order to satisfy the esthetic requirements of one or another category of citizens. Those who have needs of that kind provide for themselves at their own expense and according to their own tastes. These truisms, over which we are still at the fighting point in France, have been accepted in the United States even by the adherents of the oldest and most unprogressive of Christian sects.

"Although the American people and the state are officially entirely indifferent to the organization of the divers forms of religious activity, they are both innately religious. The constitution of the United States makes no mention of God, but their official life is full of him—a striking example of which is that the sessions of the senate and congress, as well as other great public functions, are opened with prayer. . . . The religious peace, so justly praised and envied, which the United States enjoys—a peace which excludes neither the activity nor liveliness of religious sentiment nor even the most heated discussions occasioned by differences of opinion, religious or irreligious—has its source in the wisdom, the spirit of mutual tolerance and the respect for the freedom of others so universally practiced on the other side of the ocean, which has passed from the constitution into the manners of the people."

What Would Jesus Protest Against?

Prof. Max Margolus of the University of California said recently: "Jesus voiced the prophet's protest against the dangers which lie in all ecclesiastical, organized piety, to the cause of true inward religion. If he were here to-day, he would protest against the dangers which lie in the organized piety of to-day."

This remark furnished a very profitable subject of investigation in a meeting of the religious bodies represented about the bay. The question was, "If Jesus were here to-day, what would he protest against in the organized piety which I represent?" One person from each of the six religious bodies represented was asked to speak on this question. The confessions of the different representatives are quite suggestive and do credit to the candor of the various speakers. It is a very wholesome thing to bring our ecclesiastical organizations to the test of the mind of Christ. This is precisely what we ought to do continually.

Some of the things which the speakers were sure that Jesus would protest against, were he here to-day, were: "Denominational braggadocio," "emphasis on things incidental and non-essential, growing out of an abnormal denominational self-consciousness;" "too much ecclesiasticism;" "denominational overlapping;" "divisions among members of the same general religious family;" "a leaning toward idolatry;" "lack of books of devotion and of religion in the home," and "denominational narrowness and pugnacity." In none of the confessions, however, do we notice a distinct recognition of the evil of a divided church, growing out of a departure from New Testament ideals and principles, nor a sufficient yearning to return to the simpler faith and practice of the New Testament church in order to realize its original unity. It is certain that if Jesus were here to-day, there is nothing he would protest against more urgently and deprecate more sincerely than the breaking up of that unity among his disciples for which he prayed while here, and the causes which have brought about this result.

Following the brief confessions from the representatives of the different religious bodies, there was a paper by Bro. Frank S. Ford, of the First Christian church of San Francisco, of which The Pacific, from which we have gleaned this report of the meeting, says: "It was a strong plea for unity—not uniformity—based on scriptural statements. Christ was held up, not only as a reconciler of men with God, but also of men with one another. Paul's doctrine of union was forcibly presented and the divisiveness in the church was declared to be responsible for the present impotency of the gospel. Following the discussion of this paper, around the lunch table, the question of making immersion one of the conditions of union was freely discussed, and the question was asked Brother Ford as to whether the people he represented or any portion of them, 'are willing to leave the mode of baptism to the individual decision.' Mr. Ford replied that 'they were willing to let the scholarship of the world decide what was the early Christian mode of baptism, and proceeded to indicate what position, in his judgment, the majority of the scholars took.' The remark of course from the other side was: 'I do not think the scholarship of the world does so decide.' And here the matter was dropped."

Is it, then, regarded about the bay as a question which cannot be decided as to what is the consensus of opinion among the scholars of the world concerning what baptism originally meant? This would be a strange fact, if it were a fact, that we cannot ascertain what is the voice of scholarship on this question. As to "leaving the mode of baptism to individual decision," there is of course nothing else to do. Nobody proposes to let anybody else but the individual decide what is baptism, and whether he shall obey the command or not. There is no question whatever at that point. The only question is whether a body of Christians who have one mind and one heart on this subject, and who are working together to promote Christian union by restoring the New Testament conditions of fellowship, should, for the sake of union, admit the validity of a practice which they believe to have been unknown to Jesus and his apostles, to the displacement of a divine command. The next time these San Francisco brethren gather around their luncheon in fraternal discussion, let them tackle this problem. Meanwhile, it is a good sign that brethren can come together in friendly intercourse to talk over their differences and to bring their church organizations to the test of the mind of Christ.

One of Our Educational Centers.

Des Moines, Iowa, is a good illustration of how an opportunity, seized at the proper time and wisely improved, may turn comparative failure into large success. A few years ago our cause was relatively weak and unknown in the capital of the Hawkeye state. Then came the conception to G. T. Carpenter and F. M. Drake, and some others, of the founding of an institution of learning in that city. No sooner was the conception clearly formed than it began to take practical shape, and the liberality of Gen. F. M. Drake made it a splendid reality. The result has been to make that city a strong center of our reformatory movement, not only in that city, but in the state and in the northwest. Strong churches, with splendid buildings, with large and excellent membership, exert a wide influence in the city and throughout the state and country. Drake university with its various buildings, standing in a beautiful campus in the finest part of the city, with hundreds of students in its different departments, and its excellent faculty, is an enduring and ever-increasing monument to the memory of F. M. Drake. How much better is such a monument than any splendid mausoleum or stately shaft of marble!

Drake university under the presidency of Dr. Hill M. Bell is moving forward to increasing usefulness and power, gathering new strength, year by year, for its vast work. The Bible college of the university contains such teachers as Dean A. M. Haggard, Professors Clinton Lockhart and Stairs. This department is preparing to build a new building for itself, which will add to its facilities and usefulness.

It was a great pleasure to the Editor to be present on the Lord's day, June 12, to deliver a baccalaureate sermon at 3 o'clock to the graduates of the university, numbering one hundred and twenty-five from the various departments, and to deliver a lecture to the Bible college in the evening. The University place church has been greatly blessed in securing as its pastor Charles S. Medbury, who has special fitness for the place and whose impress upon the minds of the young people of the university is bound to be not only permanent but most salutary. We are glad to add that he seems to be fully appreciated by the church and community. He has a great church and a great field of usefulness. We had the pleasure of meeting Dr. H. C. Breeden, also, pastor of the Central church, that has been the bulwark of our cause in Des Moines for many years. It is one of the great churches of the brotherhood, and Bro. Breeden has taken deep root in the life of the community and of the state.

Des Moines is a beautiful city of one hundred thousand population, and it is a matter for congratulation that the cause of our reformation is so strongly established here at the capital where its influence is felt in every part of the state. Des Moines is the educational, commercial and religious capital of the state, as well as the political capital.

It was a pleasure to us to meet many old friends and acquaintances of former years during our brief stay, and three of our foreign missionaries—Frank Barrett and wife and Miss Bertha Clawson—the two first of China and the latter of Japan. We would gladly have tarried longer had our duties permitted, but we came away cheered with the outlook for our cause in the great state of Iowa, because of what is being done for it through Drake university.

Editor's Easy Chair.

A ride through old Missouri in the rare days of June, when the undulating wheat fields bend gracefully to the passing breeze, when the young corn can almost be seen and heard in the very act of growing, when summer has arrayed forest and orchard and meadow in robes of living green, is enough to make a native feel proud of his imperial state, and all her adopted children to congratulate themselves upon their happy choice. Her soil, her mineral resources, her forests, her majestic rivers and winding streams, her geographical location and climate, her hills, her valleys, her prairies, with the great variety of her productions, constitute a physical basis for the highest type of civilization. One sees, everywhere, also, comfortable homes, schoolhouses, church spires, colleges, asylums, hospitals, orphanages—the indisputable proofs that the people who live in Missouri have a regard for those higher needs of man, for which enlightened peoples only provide. It is the degree of interest manifested in providing for the wants in these higher ranges of our being that marks the stage of progress in any state or country.

That our beloved state is to take high rank in population and wealth among her sister states cannot be doubted. But what is to be her rank in intelligence, in a high order of citizenship, in virtue, in those higher qualities of statehood, manhood and womanhood, which proclaim the presence and operation of the highest molding forces of civilization? That is the question which concerns us most deeply. Those who love our dear old state the most cannot deny that her future in this respect is still undetermined. We must confess, too, that her intellectual, moral and religious progress has not kept pace with her material development. In her engrossment with her physical resources, she has forgotten the claims of religion and the obligations of an enlightened and honest citizenship, until political corruption has gotten such a hold upon the state and our principal cities as to fill the hearts of good people with dismay and to give us a most unsavory reputation abroad. But it is cheering to know that a reaction has set in against these political abuses, and that the spirit of reform walks abroad in the state unchallenged, save by some antiquated politicians who deny that political graft is an issue in the state. But the people have already spoken. The issue is defined. It only remains to redeem the fair name of the state by an overwhelming victory for reform.

These lines are written as we ride nearly across the state to attend the annual convention of the religious forces of the Disciples of Christ—the largest body numerically in the state of Missouri, and possessing a proportionate part of its wealth and social and political influence, and having, therefore, the largest responsibility for the moral and religious welfare of the people of the state. How many will feel this moral compulsion and will leave their business offices, their farms, their shops, to take counsel together as to how we may best advance the kingdom of God in this imperial state? That remains to be seen. We are sure, however, that as a brotherhood of believers and co-workers in the state, we have not risen to a proper realization of our obligations and of our opportunities. We are not devoting a sufficient amount of money to the work of evangelizing and strengthening the churches in the state. We are slow to recognize the claims of our schools in the state upon us and the imperious necessity of endowing them if we are to exert an influence upon the religious thought and life of the state commensurate with our numbers.

When it comes, therefore, to the question, "What is to be the future of Missouri in relation to those things that make up a high civilization?" we, the Disciples of Christ in Missouri, have no slight responsibility. Let us recognize it. Let us plan to meet it. This will demand enterprise and consecration. It is no small thing to hold leadership among the religious forces of a great state like Missouri. It cannot be done without education, consecration and unification of our forces. These are the high ends to be promoted by our annual convocations, and they are of sufficient importance to challenge the attention and enlist the interest of every intelligent Disciple in the state. If we shirk our duty we miss our opportunity and will prove ourselves unworthy representatives of a great religious reformation.

Notes and Comments.

Nothing is more characteristic of agnosticism than its assumption of ability to teach others concerning the very things of which it claims nothing can be known. Rev. A. C. Dixon, in the Western Recorder, hits it off in this fashion:

Agnosticism must believe that ignorance has a right to speak and instruct knowledge. When a man confesses that he knows nothing and can know nothing of any subject, it becomes him to keep quiet on that subject, but agnosticism writes books and magazine articles, parading its ignorance with intellectual pride. It has established a sort of science of ignorance, and formed a blind man's club for the propagation of blindness. It parades its peacock feathers of rhetorical assumptions, and struts before the gaudy collectors of its own imaginings, ludicrously forgetful of the fact that people are laughing at its ugly feet of folly.

Our esteemed neighbor, the Central Baptist, lifts a warning voice against the dangers of church union, such as, lower standard of Christian morals, formalism, union of church and state and the crushing out of our religious liberty. Evidently our neighbor is thinking not of Christian union, but of ecclesiastical consolidation—an event so remote and improbable that our neighbor's warning against its possible consequences, inevitably suggests the incident of the antique maiden who was found weeping one day, as she sat at her loom. Being asked for the reason of her sorrow, she replied that she was just thinking that if she should ever marry, and should have a child, and the child should be playing under the loom, and the shuttle should drop from her hand, it might fall into the child's eye and put it out!

Why not have a parliament of the religious press in connection with the St. Louis Fair? The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of that city asks the question and answers (it affirmatively with effective argument and suggested topics. Perhaps the strongest reason given for it is that it would promote greater unity among the churches represented by denominational newspapers. It would have promoted division not so very long ago, but their editors have a different temper now. We should like to sit in council with our brethren who try to use the pen as a rudder to steer denominational ships into the same port.—The Congregationalist and the Christian World.

This is just what we would expect from our enterprising contemporary of Boston. Not only would such a congress tend to promote unity by furthering a better acquaintanceship of each other, and with that a higher appreciation of each other, but it would tend to accentuate religion as a factor in the progress of mankind. It seems to us that, without any such intention on the part of those who have given shape and character to the great exposition, religion has had a rather subordinate place, and it impresses us that we owe it to the cause of our common Christianity to meet together as brethren representing its claims through the press, to consider questions of mutual interest, which bear on the progress of the kingdom of God. We are delighted, so far, with the spirit of unanimity with which our suggestion has been received.

We are glad to observe the unanimity of sentiment touching the suggestion of a Religious Press Congress to be held in connection with the World's Fair in this city, in the early part of October. The following is from the Christian Companion, which, after copying our suggestion in full, says:

We heartily endorse the foregoing suggestion because we feel sure that such a congress as is contemplated could but result in good in many respects. The topics indicated by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are well worthy of earnest consideration, and their discussion would certainly tend to elevate religious journalism, and put it in the front rank of agencies to lead the public in all matters pertaining to morals and religion.

Surely, if earnest and dignified editors could come together in the spirit of Christ, and discuss the one matter of Christian union, it would be calculated to promote this important end. As a people, we have nothing to lose and much to gain by such a conference. We are ready to encourage every movement that is calculated to further and not hinder unity among Christian people.

"Not to be ministered to but to minister." Such was the mission of Jesus. Such is the mission of every disciple of Jesus. It is not always appreciated, but such is the fact nevertheless, and yet how few, relatively, are bearing the burdens of the church and of the world's work. Take any single congregation and divide it into two classes, the helpers and the hinderers; the wings and the weights; the lifters and the leaners, and see how the latter class outnumbers the first. A writer in the Christian and Missionary Alliance, signing the initials "E. W. W." has put this sentiment into rhyme, and we submit it here in the hope that every reader will put the question to himself, which is asked in the last couplet:

"No; the two kinds of people on earth I mean
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.

"Wherever you go you will find the world's masses
Are always divided into just these two classes.

"And, oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.

"In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?

"Or are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?"

"Young Preacher": We gladly answer your question as to the length of a sermon. A sermon should not be longer than to reach from your first good thought to your last good thought. It is better to preach a short good sermon than a long "able discourse." It is also a question whether, for an ordinary congregation—and most congregations are ordinary—a long sermon is ever a good sermon.—Standard, Chicago.

Like the "organ question" and others about which men bother, the Bible gives no instructions about the length of sermons. But it indicates that the apostolic preachers preached Jesus. If he be preached the Standard's advice is admirable.

"Will you excuse us if we have breakfast an hour earlier on Sunday morning? It is our custom to go with our children to our Sunday school, which is always preceded by prayer-meeting for half an hour, and that we never miss."

So said the Princess Bernadotte, of Sweden, to her guest, Rev. F. B. Meyer, on a recent visit. Her husband, the crown prince, renounced his right to the throne in order to devote all his time to religious work, and both are earnest Sunday-school teachers. This royal prince and his wife are more beloved by the Swedish people for their good deeds and righteous life than for his royal blood. The example they set is one that might be copied by many a father and mother in countries far distant from Sweden.

Our Foreign Society is asking for the small sum of $50,000 for a Bible college in India. It is the purpose of the Baptists, just announced at their Cleveland convention, to raise an endowment fund of $500,000 to be used in the education of a native ministry in foreign mission fields. President Ward, of Newton Seminary, who presented the resolution, said he believed this policy would in ten years produce greater effect than ten times the sum spent on evangelization by American missionaries. There is not a doubt that this move is a wise one.

Every editor is eager to discover good writers. Many writers fail because they do not know when to stop writing; some because they do not hit their mark soon enough. An editor is always a busy man, and if he does not "find the meat" early he will not waste time which he can employ more profitably. The following from the editor of the Christian Observer contains a valuable hint. Dr. Converse says: "One of the most acceptable writers that we know gave us his experience the other day. When a young man he sent an article to the Independent. The editor returned it with the remark, 'There is much of value in this article; boil it down and return it to me.' The young man rewrote it, trimming and pruning with severity. Again the article came back to him with the message, 'Almost perfect; boil it down some more.' With a vigorous determination the author pruned it again. Then came the answer, 'That is good; now in this compact style you may write often for our columns.'"

It is both a good and a bad sign of the times when our popular magazines take to discussing such a question as to whether we as a nation are losing our sense of sin. A Harper's Weekly writer has been commenting on the remarks of two well known Presbyterian ministers about the degenerating moral standard of the American people. The ministers maintained with much reason that ideals of the home have been lowered; that we are suffering from the social scourge of easy divorce; that childless firesides are taking the place of family circles; that things that used to be wrong are wrong no longer. It is easy and pleasant to take the standpoint of the magazine writer when he says that the American people are intelligent "and undoubtedly want to be good. If it is true that just now they are less successful than usual in realizing their best aspirations, we must believe that it is only a passing condition born of vast changes, and that presently they will get their bearings again and steer a better course." But, after all, just believing that we are going to improve is not going to help us very rapidly to improve. There is enough growing evil in this country to make the assistance of every right-loving magazine writer imperative in attempting to eradicate or control it.

Asked by his friends what his creed was, Pennsylvania's new United States senator replied: "My creed is to live for those I love and do all the good I can." That is the working theology of a great many men who are dissatisfied with church creeds that concern formulated beliefs more than life. And the new senator is a church member.

"In any age of the world there cannot be a Christian discipleship without a cross; there cannot be a following of Jesus unless one denies himself."

So says Mr. Sheldon, in an article just published. This is the note that has to be constantly emphasized. Every suggested program of salvation brings us back to Jesus Christ. But we cannot fulfill the "do unto others" without at some point experiencing genuine sacrifice.

The scenters of heresy in the Methodist conference did not win any laurels. They were practically told to go away back and keep to themselves. They had a fair chance to be heard, but their charges were not found justifiable, and they were rather regarded as troublers in Israel, without the ability to distinguish between the reverent, devout scholar and investigator and the infidel.

Crayton S. Brooks, in a sermon before the Texas State Endeavor convention, said that while he believed in real organic Christian union, if that is now impossible by reason of slight differences of theological opinion, we should certainly be a unit against all iniquity. It is well for us to remember this point just now. We are getting close to the political boiling time, and it behooves Christians, without being politicians—if that is their bugbear—to do all in their power to impregnate politics with religion. It is not preaching politics to say "thou shalt not steal."

No man can compute the power of the Disciples of Christ if they would only unite their efforts and co-operate in their great work of preaching Christian union and saving souls. How much of our strength is latent—we have vast numbers unorganized—undeveloped, useless to the kingdom of Christ. Our board of home missions is trying to reach our unorganized, untrained brethren to help home missions. Our board of home missions is our agency in building up the cause of New Testament Christianity in America. This is the method by which we co-operate and organize our work. Our home missionaries are doing a most excellent work; we should double our efforts to save the people by this great agency.

Scriptural Authority for Official Board

By E. H. Kellar

A board is defined to be "a number of persons organized and constituted for the stated performance of some designated official functions."

In our congregations the official board is generally made up of the officers of the congregation, viz., the elders and the deacons, hence it is called the official board. Now we direct ourselves to the inquiry, is there any scriptural authority for such an official board, if so, what is it?

It is true the authority might be slight and far fetched, a matter for temporary expediency, or it might be full and abiding and a sine qua non of congregational life.

Now, however contradictory it may appear, we wish to say the authority is both slight and full, temporary and abiding.

It is slight from the view point of "becoming a Christian"; it is full from the view point of continuing and developing as a Christian. And both these view points are legitimate, not contradictory but supplementary.

Now, some are so absorbed with the "law of induction into the kingdom," that they concern themselves but little with the "all things whatsoever I have commanded you," after becoming a Christian, and to all such an official board is an innovation copied from sectarianism.

The question with us is not what a sectarian may or may not do, but, what about ourselves? We are enjoined "to press on to full growth" (Heb. 6:1). "And we desire that each one of you may show the same diligence unto the fullness of hope, even to the end, that ye be not sluggish, but imitators of them, who through faith and patience inherit the promise" (Heb. 6:11, 12). There is full authority for elders and deacons (1 Tim. 3:1-15; Titus 1:5-9).

There is authority for them when they act separately, and there is authority for them when they act "joined together" as an "official board," for the apostle says (1 Thess. 5:11, 12): "Wherefore exhort [comfort] one another, and build each other up, even as also ye do. But we beseech you, brethren, to know them that labor among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you, and to esteem them exceeding highly in love for their work's sake," and (Heb. 13:1, 7, 17): "Let love of the brethren continue. . . . Remember them that have rule over you, which spake unto you the word of God; and considering the issue of their manner of life, imitate their faith. . . . Obey them that have the rule over you and submit to them, for they watch in behalf of your souls, as they that shall give account; that they may do this with joy and not with grief." From the foregoing it is a necessary inference that the elders and deacons by divine authority loved one another, labored together, counseled and comforted one another, in short, that a definite "number of persons were organized and constituted for the stated performance of some designated official functions."

This is also inferred from Paul's salutation (Phil. 1:1): "Paul and Timothy, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops [elders] and deacons."

If the official board is the elders and deacons of a congregation, then Paul addressed himself to all the saints at Philippi with the official board.

You say the case is made out, i. e., scriptural authority for official board, if the board is made up of elders and deacons and no others. The matter then might rest here. Then we would direct ourselves to see who are included under the terms "elders" and "deacons" and brethren. We would find (which I will not take time to demonstrate) that pastors, overseers, evangelists, preachers, teachers, ministers, as well as the ordinarily conceived "elders" and "deacons," are included in the term "bishops and deacons" which Paul uses. In other words it can be demonstrated that not only do the scriptures tolerate but actually authorize one or two boards, to any number and any size, in the local congregation or among the congregations.

Now let no one get frightened; these boards all have their limitations just as elders and evangelists do, little as some people think it. Their functions are all administrative and none legislative, so the authority of scripture is full enough in the one instance to see that the work is carried on till the world is evangelized, and we all come into the unity of the faith, and the authority is lacking enough in the other instance to check any abortive organization that presumes to preach any other gospel.

Nor is there danger of this shattering congregationalism any more than having a president of the United States shatters democracy. But you say to me, if you try to prove too much you are likely to prove nothing, that the subject is "Scriptural Authority for the Official Board," which confines it to the elders and deacons and to the local congregation. But in this matter we go not in a predetermined channel of our subject with limitations that may appear helpful, but we follow the teaching of the scriptures. In this matter the greater comprehends the less.

The clearest statement of authority on this subject is the general one (1 Cor. 12:28): "And God hath set some in the church" (compare 1 Cor. 15:28;

Eph. 1:23; Eph. 4:6), "first, apostles; secondly, prophets; thirdly, teachers; then miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments" (margin wise counsels) "divers kinds of tongues" (Amer. Rev.) Wilson Emphatic Diaglott reads (1 Cor. 12:28): "And those whom God placed in the congregation are first, apostles; second, prophets; third, teachers, next powers, then gifts of cures, assistants, directors, different languages."

You tell me there is only one 1 Cor. 12:28 with its "helps and governments"; true, and there is only one Acts 2:38 with its "baptism for remission." Still 1 Cor. 12:28 does not stand alone to substantiate official boards; no more does Acts 2:38 for baptism for remission of sins. Nevertheless we do not ignore Acts 2:38 nor must 1 Cor. 12:28 be ignored because there is but one 1 Cor. 12:28.

But it is alleged that the catalogue in this verse is the same in different words as that contained in the 8-10 verses of the same chapter, which are all supernatural endowments, and hence no longer in the church, disappearing with the apostles, prophets and miracle workers. While it is not disputed that verses 8-10 relate to the supernatural alone, it is denied that "teachers," "helps," and "governments" in verse 28 are exclusively of the miraculous order; the harmony is more with the order as stated by Paul (Rom. 12:6-8): "And having gifts differing according to the grace that was given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of our faith, or ministry, to our ministry, or he that teacheth, to his teaching, or he that exhorteth, to his exhortation, he that giveth, with liberality, he that ruleth, with diligence, he that sheweth mercy, with cheerfulness."

Wilson renders the eighth verse thus: "The exhorter in exhortation, let the distributor act with disinterestedness, the president with diligence, the sympathizer with cheerfulness." Notice also the harmony of 1 Cor. 12:28 with Eph. 4:11, 12, "And he gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering unto the building up of the body of Christ."

The harmonies are striking, the work of distributing, helping, governing, presiding, directing and serving calls for a vast number of committees and combinations, both in the local body and the general body.

Moreover, note the meaning of the words "helps," "governments," in 1 Cor. 12:28—antilepsies, a help, aid, assistance, one who aids or assists, the office of taking care of the poor and sick, and kubernesis, guiding, steering, ruling, directing, governing," etc.

As the congregations grow in numbers and knowledge, deaconesses, as suggested in Rom. 16, and elderesses, as in 1 Tim. 5, with such other helpers and directors as the work requires, will be added to the official board, not to make it cumbersome but to make it efficient and sufficient. If a congregation of fifty members needs three or four elders and deacons, with Bible-school superintendents and teachers, ladies' aid, etc., what does not a church of 500 or 1,000 need for the development and utilizing of all its talents?

We conclude, then, that the governing of the church of God is a matter not omitted in scripture, but as thus indicated, there is divine authority for these combinations and arrangements, as in the congregation the official board, in the county the county board, in the state the state board, in the nation the American board, and for the world the foreign board, so that in the great one body it will not be a mob dismembered, "but speaking the truth in love, may grow up in all things into him which is the head, even Christ; from whom all the body fittly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth, according to the working in due measure of each several part, maketh the increase of the body unto the building up of itself in love."

Our Country Churches—II. By W. T. Moore

The present condition of our country churches is far from what it ought to be. As an illustration of what I mean, it is only necessary to state that in Boone county there are all together about twenty-one churches, and all of these are country or village churches but three. It is also perhaps safe to say that these country churches average as well as any in the state, owing to the fact that most of them have pastoral care, which, to some extent at least, meets the requirements of the case. Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly true that fully one-half of these churches are slowly dying, and unless something is done for their rescue it is only a matter of time as to when their demise will be complete. The same is true of the churches in Callaway and Audrain counties. With several of these I am quite familiar, and know their real condition at first hand.

Now, let it be stated with emphasis that, for the most part, these churches are not to blame for the condition of things that prevail. They are simply victims of a system which has been entailed upon them and which is now doing its ugly work. In the earlier days of our religious movement these churches were the centers of considerable religious influence. Their elders, though sometimes poorly equipped for the service to which they were called, were at least active and earnest in discharging the duties resting upon them. The churches were willing to accept of the services which these elders rendered, and consequently very generally these churches held services every Lord's day, at which services the Lord's supper was observed, the scriptures read, and frequently some practical remarks made which helped to impress the scriptures upon the minds of the hearers. This was the best that could be done in those days, as an educated ministry was then hardly contemplated.

The next step in the evolution of the country churches was the hegira which set towards the towns and cities. Some of the most active members emigrated to the towns and cities and thereby left many of the country churches practically helpless, both as regards means for carrying on their work and also with regard to men capable of doing it. This fact helped the town and city churches, but it practically destroyed many of the country churches. Another disintegrating custom began to prevail. The country churches began to "put on city ways." They seemed to think that it was impossible for them to succeed without a preacher specially qualified by training and experience to minister on the Lord's day. The result was that most of the churches ceased to have any service at all except when this preacher made his appearance. It happened, furthermore, that there was a sudden falling off of men who were capable of teaching the congregations, and also a falling off of young men who were ready to devote themselves to the ministry of the word. The country churches, which had at first furnished nearly all the material for the supply of preachers, became practically barren, for the reason that no encouragement was given to home talent and no opportunity for cultivating that talent. The only thing that a young man could do was to make his way into some college, and then, after training in this college, he might become the preacher of some church. What made matters worse still was that these very young men were sought for mainly by the churches to supply the pulpits, and largely because their services could be obtained for slight remuneration. The result has been that at present most of these country churches are supplied with monthly preaching by young men who are certainly not very competent for the task for which they have been called, or else by a class of preachers who have spent their lives mainly in preaching under the "once a month system" until they have nothing better than a class of stereotyped sermons with which to feed their hungry flocks.

It does not take much foresight to determine what this state of things would ultimately produce. This is what it has produced: Once a month service and preaching by someone who had better be in a Bible-class, or else by someone who has been preaching the same sermons with scarcely any variation for the last twenty-five or thirty years.

Now, this is no fancy sketch. It is simply a picture true to life, and it is certainly a lamentable picture to look upon by anyone who is deeply interested in the success of our cause.

Another fact is equally discouraging. It is the exception rather than the rule to find a religious paper in the families of these country members. The stock journals are taken, and also a political paper. Usually, the county paper is also found in these families. But it is rarely the case that you will find as many as even half a dozen copies of our religious papers in the families of any church. Now, this is, perhaps, the most discouraging feature of the whole downward movement. The time was when the Millennial Harbinger was a regular visitor to many families of these country churches; but one looks now in vain for even the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and as for the Standard and other papers, it is very rare indeed that a single copy is taken in any country church in the state of Missouri.

Now, it is simply impossible to hope from a condition of things like this that any real religious progress can be made. These country churches are, for the most part, out of sympathy with the vital forces of our religious movement. They are simply on the outside, or in some obscure corner where they have no practical association with the work that is going on.

Nor is this all. The Lord's day is not only skipped so far as religious service is concerned, but it is often spent in the interest of social functions which have little or no help in them, to say the least, for the development of the spiritual life. The women spend the Lord's day mainly in cooking a big dinner, while several neighbors occupy their time in discussing the markets and politics of the country. The name of Christ is not mentioned, except when thanks are returned at the dinner table, and then it would seem almost a mockery to mention his name at all. This social visiting on the Lord's day, to the neglect of religious worship, is gradually but certainly undermining the possibilities of spiritual growth in our country churches. The young people, without any Sunday-school and without even any religious literature in the house, necessarily drift from bad to worse.

Is there any remedy for all this? I believe there is. And in another article I shall attempt to point out how our country churches may be saved.

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

The old question, "Why do men not go to church?" bobs up serenely again. Every little while, especially during "the silly season," when the newspapers have little to publish, somebody starts this discussion, just as men ask "How old is Ann?" It never occurs to these investigators to ask, "Why do men go to church?" When Robert Ingersoll was at the height of his popularity here, he would be advertised with a great fanfare of trumpets once or twice in the winter season and there would be a great blow in the papers about the crowds that flocked to hear him, and the funny things he said in ridicule of Christianity, and it would seem to shallow-minded folks as if he were taking the town. One of this class said to me: "How is this; you preachers get at best moderate congregations, and this infidel crowds the largest theater in the city at fifty cents apiece? Why do so many people go after this man?" "Suppose," I answered, "you put the question the other way, Why do so many people crowd the churches? How is it such multitudes go after the preachers? Ingersoll is reported to be a great orator. He comes once a year and fills a theater at fifty cents a head. He draws upon the ungodly classes, the saloon men and gamblers, and irreligious people generally, and some curious Christian people no doubt go to hear him to see what he will say or in admiration of his eloquence. Still, he gets but one audience a year, and that for a specially prepared address of an unusual character. Here are a hundred and fifty churches, open fifty-two days in the year, with plain men in their pulpits who claim no special genius as orators, and yet commanding good audiences twice a week the year round, and hundreds and thousands of these people paying not fifty cents once a year, but for every service, and many of them five dollars or ten dollars every Lord's day, and giving besides large sums to send this same gospel to the regions beyond. Why is it so many people go to the churches and pay so liberally for their religion, while the most gifted orator in America, drawing upon the saloon-keepers and the tenderloin district and lewd persons of the baser sort, and all the elements that are antagonistic to Christianity or indifferent to it, can only get one audience a year, with twelve or fifteen hundred, at half a dollar apiece, to hear Christianity assailed?" My friend had never thought of it in that light.

Why do men not go to church? It might be well to ask first whether it is true that men do not go to church. Perhaps there is no reason to ask why they do not go. For twenty-nine years I have preached in the same pulpit here under the shadow of the dome, and have had some opportunity to observe the habits of men in this respect, and I have never noticed that this was a fact. On the contrary, my congregation has its share of men, and I have perceived no manifest falling off in their attendance. As in all churches, there is a larger proportion of women at the services generally, but there is no lack of men in the Sunday-school, in the prayer-meeting, in the Lord's day services and in all the activities of the congregation; and there never were so many as to-day, and never men more loyal and devoted. I have no reason to question that the same is true of the other churches at the nation's capital.

Censuses of church attendance taken last year in London and New York showed that in both cities women and children form a great majority of the congregations—a state of affairs that prevails in practically, we are told, all the countries of Christendom, with the exception of Russia. The New York Sun, which is not eminently religious, nor always by any means accurate, declares: "The reason why men do not go to church is obvious enough. They are not interested in the church because they are not interested in religion. They have not the deep and vital religious faith of which church worship is the outward expression. They may think they believe, but actually they do not believe in the religion they profess. They are not convinced that their fate for all eternity depends on faith in its dogmas and obedience to its obligations." Our Washington Post, which is friendly to the churches, and whose managing editor is one of my flock, has this to say of the men: "They are attracted in crowds by those preachers who do not weary them with expositions of their purely personal views as to abstruse and uninteresting questions of theology, but preach instead the message from the Mount of Olives, which all can understand and to which every heart responds with gratitude and reverence."

The New York Herald has communications from many prominent clergymen on this live question. One of them, Dr. Peters, says: "I don't think the small attendance of men applies to churches only, but to nearly all public meetings and gatherings. Count heads in any theater, and you will find more women than men. I don't care what a meeting may be for, even matters of business and municipal affairs, if women are invited more will be present than men. You have only to call a meeting against tearing up Amsterdam avenue, and the women will turn out in force—two to one man. One need not go far to find a reason for it. Women have but few avenues or outlets for their energies and emotions compared with men. If they had the same duties, enterprises and wide interest in affairs—political, financial, commercial and business generally—as men, their minds would be so occupied that they would not care so much for meetings."

The Jewish Rabbi Singer contributes to the discussion, and thinks the synagogues themselves responsible for the situation. "Jewish synagogues," he says, "have ceased to be houses of prayer." They have transformed themselves into lecture halls. The old prayer-book has been discarded, and in place of the reading of the Torah comes the lecture. The eloquent and scholarly rabbi of Temple Beth-El, on Fifth Avenue, reproached the pious orthodox women of the Russian congregation in Pike street "that they seem to consider the synagogue exclusively as a house of prayer." Social work and philanthropy have replaced religion—the ladies can attend to the first, while the checks can be mailed by the men from their Broadway offices. This situation prevails in the synagogue.

Dr. G. Minot Savage and Mrs. Ballington Booth testify in the symposium that they have more men than women attendant upon their services and interested in their work. One explanation made by many of those participating in the discussion is that women by nature are more devotional than men. This may explain why the chaplains on Blackwell's Island and at Sing Sing have more men than women in their congregations. Recently I myself preached to an audience of four hundred men and there were less than a dozen women. But this was in the city jail. Why do women not go to prison? may be a pertinent question in this connection.

I am satisfied that we often set up a man of straw and wrestle with him. It is sometimes said men never attend the public worship of the great cathedrals of the old world—only a few women and beggars. That is not true. On one occasion I was in the cathedral of Cologne when an audience of seven thousand men was present, and not a single woman, and all that great assemblage of men joined in the service and sang—a mighty volume of praise, filling and reverberating through the vast temple like the songs John tells of in his vision on Patmos. More than that, I was at seven services that Lord's day and every one was largely attended, and it was no unusual day either. That men do not attend the services of the Lord's house as they should, there is no question. Preachers need to be more mindful of the needs of men. Our Lord was to draw all men unto him. He preached to men and women, as well as women and little children. The Apostle Paul moved great assemblies of men. Fishers of men we are to be, and the faithful minister

The Sealed Book

BY J. S. HUGHES.

As there is no other book in the Bible that gives half so much praise of its own importance as the closing one, the Revelation, it is strange it should be the one least esteemed. If we pronounce it a sealed book what answer can we give to those who equally disregard all the other books, saying they too are sealed? The more, when we think that this one has the great distinction of calling itself "the Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him." What right has a Christian in the role of an agnostic that does not equally belong to any other agnostic? If we Christians take up a reproach against this book and say that he who reads it to discern its meaning is fighting fog-banks or windmills, what answer have we for the infidel who goes further to say the same of our studying other books?

Should not some doctor of divinity put out a book on "The Mistakes of Christ's Revelation," to sell in company with Ingersoll's book on "The Mistakes of Moses"?

That has been done already all except in name. We should hardly allow anyone to so lightly regard any of Paul's writings unchallenged. Paul's letters are oftener preached from and oftener read than Christ's own letters to the churches, and the spirit of controversy is waged more over questions which are touched in his doctrines than over those of life and divine living by Christ.

To what extent may we be rejecting Christ in rejecting the book which is especially called his own more than any other? Our relation to both John's books is the greatest paradox of Christendom. Nearly all our great scholars continue to regard John in a weird and alien light, and to find fault with him, just as Roman Catholics do with Paul, nearly always naming their churches St. Peter's. Protestants are equally fond of calling their churches St. Paul's, and it would seem that a people preferring to call their churches "the church of Christ" ought certainly to make much over the one book that calls itself the book of Christ in distinction from all the other books. It is a fact, also, that the gospel of John, though written last and the most independent and without a doubt of its apostolic origin, should be forced into a supplement and a subordinate value to Luke's and Mark's gospels, who were not apostles, as all know.

This glorious and truly authentic gospel of John, called "the spiritual gospel," is even partly discredited because of that later and most wonderful book of his, the Revelation. The book that crowns the Bible and exalts Christ, whose revelation it truly is, has been abused till even John's apostle ship must suffer, and his gospel be reduced by the fact that should most exalt it. There is a violent contradiction between the facts about John and our fixed habit of disregarding him and his writings. Just now there is a controversy going on in the press, whether the colleges and universities are not educating our children away from Christ. I think it was Shailer Matthews who began it last August in Christendom, and others are now taking it up.

There is no doubt at all but that the religion we have is in a strong sense the religion of the schools, and anyone who has ever lived in a college town has had an experience that needs no explanation. It is time there should be a purely Christian training school where the religious mind shall hold the place of supreme power in our religious consciousness, and not the dead heathen classics, as now, nor the pretended science that exalts itself against the knowledge of God. I affirm that such is now mostly the school method of regarding things, and that it hinders the intelligent and soulful reading of John's writings, and as well also the other scriptures in their deeper meaning. It was in fact Paul's scholarship that stood partly in his way, and that has molded us into the scholastic way of construing scripture, and filled our schools, our pulpits and our press with a surface and artificial conception of Christ. It was Peter who made complaint of this when he said that our beloved brother Paul has written some things hard to be understood, and which the ignorant and uninstructed wrested to their own destruction as they do the other scriptures.

A summer chautauqua given to the writings of John is already provided for, and local chautauquas for all seasons of the year are also in contemplation as the quickest and best means of restudying those profound writings hitherto so little understood. For more than two centuries the whole thought of the western nations has been engaged in analysis. Everything has been taken to pieces and reduced to the last possible subdivision; but we have entered upon a new era, an era of synthesis. Analysis is weakening, coherence is strength, and we are now putting things together, and the day of power is coming. There is no other difference so great between Paul and John, though there are many, as this—that Paul is analytic and scholastic, while John is most synthetic and prophetic. Peter for the law, Paul for the academy, but John for the kingdom.

A new, a fresh and mighty uplift awaits the world in the new trend of thought. The new sciences trend that way, psychology leading, and now becoming synthetic and strong and simple in the hands of its masters.

I sincerely and earnestly solicit the sympathy and helpfulness of all good people to set forth the truth as revealed through John's gospel and Revelation.

The Foundation and the Church.

By W. O. Moore.

I have long been interested in the church and its foundation. I put emphasis on the word "the." The church—the special church—is a divine institution. It has a divine foundation. Its fashioner and builder is the Christ, the Son of God. Its head is Christ.

The foundation is that on which the church rests. The foundation of a church is its creed. Christ said to Peter after the latter made the notable confession in Cæsarea Philippi: "I say also unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." What is the rock? Is it the person that we call the Son of God? It is what Peter said this person is. Christ asked of his apostles: "Who say ye that I am?" Peter said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

From this great truth proceeds the New Testament. It is very comprehensive. Let us to some extent see what there is in it.

1. The Christ—the anointed. He was anointed with the Holy Spirit and with power. The Father gave the Spirit not by measure unto him. He is the embodiment of infinite wisdom. He also has all power in heaven and in earth. He is a prophet, priest and king, that knows no finite limitations. What has he said as prophet—as teacher? We can declare what he taught, but are not at liberty to add to nor take from it. He is Lord of lords and King of kings. We can proclaim his leadership, his commandments, but must not add to nor take from them. He is high priest. His ministrations in our behalf as high priest are all-sufficient. This cannot be said of any other one who has been high priest.

2. He is the Son of the living God. He is immanuel—God with us. He is deity incarnate.

Christ, as the head and builder of the church, dictates how the church shall be entered. In other words, he declares what one must do in order to become a member of it. He also states what one gains by becoming a member of his church. He said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." By the new birth which brings one into the church the joys attending redemption from sin are gained. The advantages of fellowship with the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are gained, etc.

Those steadfast in Christ—in the church—will not be prevailed against by the powers of darkness. He that does the will of Christ shall abide forever.

The Religious Press & the Liquor Problem*

By J. H. Garrison

Perhaps the quickest way to get at the marrow of this subject is to ask, first, What is the liquor problem? and second, What should be the attitude of the religious press toward such problem?

I. What then is the liquor problem?

1. (It is not whether the liquor drinking habit is a good or a bad habit.) There is no room for a problem here. It is answered by what we see in the streets, by what we read in the records of criminal courts, by what we hear of lamentation from wives and widows, mothers and fathers and orphan children. It is answered in the light of the repeated woes pronounced against it in the word of God. (Science, economics and the laws of industry unite with religion in condemning liquor drinking as a habit fraught with evil consequences.)

2. The liquor problem is not whether the liquor traffic is a blessing or a curse to our civilization—to our homes, to the state and to the church. Happily we have not sunk so low in our ethical ideals as to have any problem of that kind, at least outside the circle of liquor dealers and their most depraved patrons. (The question is answered in the demoralizing influence it exerts in real estate values near places where saloons are located, in the alliance which the liquor traffic maintains with corrupt politics and politicians, in its power to control elections and corrupt courts and juries in its own interest and against the moral sense and welfare of the public.) No statesman or philanthropist would dare affirm that the liquor traffic is a blessing to mankind. We have no such problem as that to solve. The moral judgment of the age is against the liquor traffic.

3. The liquor problem is not whether the men engaged in the liquor traffic are actuated by benevolent motives, nor whether their business is regarded by the public generally as an honorable and righteous business which ought to be encouraged. Not even our legislators would entertain, for a moment, a bill entitled, "A bill to encourage and extend the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors." On the contrary they tax it by a high license which they would not think of putting upon any honorable business, professedly, at least, with a view of restraining such manufacture and sale.

4. Once more, the liquor problem is not whether the present method of dealing with it, in most of our states and cities and by the nation, is satisfactory, nor whether license, high or low, has proved to be an adequate remedy for the evils associated with the liquor business. I know of no one, whose judgment commands the respect of the public, who would affirm that the method of licensing the liquor traffic is entirely satisfactory. It is too well known that the awful ravages of the liquor traffic continue under the present license system.

(What, then, is the liquor problem? Is it not this: How shall government—municipal, state and national—deal with the liquor business so as to clear its skirts of any responsibility for the manifold evils which flow from it, and of any complicity in its crimes against civilization, and save the people from its ruinous consequences? This is not only the problem for the government, but it is the problem for the individual voter, for the religious press and for every public teacher who has anything to do with molding public sentiment.)

It is implied in what we have said that government must recognize the evils of the liquor traffic and the liquor habit, and seek to provide some adequate remedy for these evils. Indifference is out of the question. There is no one fact that has stirred my own moral indignation to greater depths than the refusal of the great political parties, in their national conventions, to place in their platforms a single plank recognizing the peril to the country of the liquor traffic and expressing their purpose to deal with the problem in a manner becoming its magnitude and its gravity. This phenomenon, happening quadrennially in the nation, and more frequently in our state and municipal campaigns, has done more than any other one thing to turn me away from the support of such parties and to compel me to cast my vote with those who are ready to front the supreme moral issue involved in our political life.

II. This brings me to consider the question, What should be the attitude of the religious press toward the liquor problem? That it should be that of uncompromising hostility to the drink habit and to the liquor traffic as now conducted I may be permitted to take for granted, notwithstanding the fact that there are a few religious journals of great influence which toy with this evil in a way which some of us cannot harmonize with the decalogue and the sermon on the mount. But if the liquor problem be, as we have defined it, namely, how to deal with the liquor traffic, as citizens and legislators, so as to avoid any complicity in its crimes, any responsibility for its evils, and most successfully protect the people from its moral and economic ravages, then the question, (What attitude should the religious press hold toward this problem? becomes very definite and very practical.

This raises another question in reference to the function of the religious press which must be noticed before we reach a conclusion on this subject. Is the religious newspaper a leader of moral and religious sentiment, or is it a mere reflector of such sentiment? May a religious editor, in deference to popular sentiment on any moral question, lower his own ethical standard in order to avoid antagonism with the moral and political ideals of his readers? Is the religious journal wedded to the highest moral and religious ideals, like husband and wife, "for better or for worse," so far as its material support is concerned? And must it stand by its highest convictions of truth, through evil report as well as through good report? (I am on record as believing that a religious newspaper should maintain its conscience and its best ideals, whether it maintains its subscription list or not. I believe it should be a leader and molder of public sentiment, and not a mere echo or reflection of such sentiment.) I believe it should "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and trust the subscribers to be "added

FOOD FACTS

What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent physician of Rome, Georgia, went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food, and I also know from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that the food is a wonderful rebuilders and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients always gain just as I did in strength and weight very rapidly."

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely and go to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was not quite as well as when I left home. My food absolutely refused to sustain me, and it became plain that I must change, then I began to use Grape-Nuts food, and in two weeks I could walk a mile without the least fatigue and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life."

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers, I consider it a duty to make these facts public." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body will work miracles.

unto" it in due time. This, I am aware, will sound impracticable to many, and someone will be ready to say, "But the newspaper must live!" Not necessarily. The world would be better off if some of them should die! I think it would be far better for any paper to die, even of starvation, than to live and thrive by the compromise of its convictions of truth and duty.

If I am right, then, as to the function of the religious journal, if it is to stand for what is highest and best, it must refuse to compromise with great public evils, as well as with private sins, and is bound to advocate that policy in reference to the liquor traffic which, in its judgment, most perfectly antagonizes its spirit, operations and results. To me, that attitude is expressed best by the policy of prohibition. If anyone has a better policy, one which will stand the test, not only of the decalogue, but of the gospel of Christ, one that promises better results, I am ready to adopt and advocate it. But, as at present informed, it seems to me that the religious press of the country ought to give its united support to prohibition, as expressing the antagonism which the Bible and the God of the Bible always assume toward sin and wrongdoing. I shall have no quarrel with any religious journal that antagonizes the liquor traffic in some other way which it believes to be more effective, as I believe it far better for the enemies of this colossal evil to antagonize their common foe than to quarrel with each other. But, as I have said, I do not see how I can free myself, either as a private citizen or as a public journalist, from all complicity with this gigantic crime against humanity, nor how government can do so, without assuming an attitude of utter hostility to the iniquitous business. Let the moral sentiment of the nation be embodied in a legal, "Thou shalt not!" which shall hang like a flaming sword over the head of every man who would debauch and ruin his brother, impoverish his family, sow the seed of crime and disorder in society, for the base purpose of sordid greed and gain, by manufacturing and selling intoxicating drinks.

There is perhaps no one thing that is doing so much to devitalize the energies of the people against the liquor traffic as the feeling that nothing can be done to improve the present situation; that the status quo must be maintained, because nothing better is possible. This sort of reasoning seems to me to ignore certain fundamental principles of ethics. If the consequences of the liquor traffic are deplorable and constitute a serious obstacle to the progress of the kingdom of God on earth, there is no choice left to one who believes in God as to what attitude he shall take respecting the source of these evils. (It is folly to say that we may attack the evils that flow from the liquor traffic, but may not attack the source of these evils.) If we have a right to oppose drunkenness, we have a right to oppose the cause of drunkenness. If we have a right to oppose crime, we have a right to oppose that which causes so large a per cent of crime. It seems to me scarcely less than infidelity, not to say practical atheism, to deny that we can make any headway in opposing that which antagonizes the will and purpose of God on earth. We vastly underestimate the resources of God and vastly overestimate the strength of Satan and his kingdom if we fear that, in a fair conflict with the forces of evil, the right will be overthrown. The devil is not half so invincible as many suppose him to be. The old fraud is an arrant coward who will not fight in the light, but seeks the cover of darkness. "Resist him and he will flee from you." One heroic soul, clad in the armor of light, can put to flight the devil and all his legions. Courage, then, faint-hearted brother! Dare to follow where your Captain leads in the very thickest of the fight against the powers of darkness, against the foes of God and man.

(It is the duty of the religious press, then, to lead on and to hearten the hosts of righteousness that are making war against every form of evil. Enough for it to know that any given custom, habit, business or law antagonizes the will of God, to call forth its earnest and unceasing opposition. It must have charity for those opposing the evil sincerely and earnestly, whether their way of opposing is its way or another way. The opponents of the liquor traffic must learn to respect the sincerity and honesty of each other's convictions and motives, even though they work in different ways. But let us lay it on the conscience of the church, of the religious press, of municipal, state and national legislators, that we cannot be loyal to God and loyal to the highest interests of humanity without opposing, in some rational, practicable and effective way, the gigantic evil of the liquor traffic, and without seeking honestly and earnestly for some true, righteous and permanent solution of the liquor problem—which is the utter prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicants, except for scientific, mechanical or medicinal purposes, and then under the most rigid surveillance of the state or nation.

of the gospel will study to meet the wants of all classes. The same gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all, but to everyone his portion in due season, meat for strong men, milk for babes. We hear a good deal about "woman's work in the church." We need to emphasize "Man's work in the church." men's Bible-classes, men's clubs, men's missionary societies are certainly as important as such organizations of women. We want more than the man's money—we want the man—his presence, his prayers, his influence, his help, his counsels, his personal power, his life, his consecrated manhood. Men need the church and the church needs the men—not more money, but more men.

Religion Made Attractive.

Bible religion made attractive to others is the most potent instrument for the conversion of souls. But few people are eloquent with the lips; yet every Christian may rise to the eloquence of a winsome example. If you cannot utter a truth from the desk or the platform, you can live out the truth, that is the best preaching after all. No infidel can answer that. It draws silently but surely. It says "come" by showing the way. The "living epistle" never needs a translation or a commentary. It is in plain English, that a child can understand. An arrant skeptic once spent a day or two with Fenelon, and on leaving he said to him, "If I stay here much longer I shall become a Christian in spite of myself."—Theodore Cuyler.

COFFEE CATARRH.

An Unsuspected Cause.

It is curious how many diseases come from a disordered nervous system which locates disease in some part of the body and the primary cause can often be traced to coffee which first breaks down the nervous system. A Georgian says:

"There is no doubt coffee gave me nasal catarrh. The ceptim in my nose was all gone and the catarrh was eating its way, getting hold of the main bone of the nose. It also affected my sight very much.

"My nose was constantly dripping bloody water, but in two weeks' time after I quit coffee and used Postum Food Coffee in its place I could see my way very well, the dripping from my nose stopped and my nose finally got perfectly well and healthy as far as is possible for the ceptim to grow back.

"There is no doubt it was a case of coffee catarrh, and the cure was made entirely by changing from coffee to postum. The rest of my family took up the new drink and Postum relieved my wife and little boy of frequent headaches, and what is called 'coffee headache' is not known in our family any more. Our sleep is so much more refreshing.

"We have influenced many people to try Postum, and all of them like it better the longer they use it, and most of them say it is better than coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial Postum in place of coffee often works wonders. There's a reason.

THE KINGDOM DIVIDED.

The lessons for the next six months are taken from the Old Testament, beginning where they left off six months ago, at the death of Solomon, and covering the period of about two hundred years from the division of the kingdom until the disappearance of the northern part of it in the captivity of the ten tribes.

The elements of corruption and weakness had already appeared in Israel before the close of Solomon's reign. Great wealth, leading to inordinate extravagance and luxury, had found its natural fruitage in the decay of virtue and the corruption of religion. The traditional policy of refraining from friendly intercourse, and especially from intermarriage with neighboring peoples—a policy which was essential to the preservation of Israel's racial and religious purity—had given place to a broad cosmopolitanism and a general intermingling with other races. For the first time, Israel found herself in the currents of the world's life—and they were, for the most part, very bad currents.

To such a kingdom, in whose fertile soil the seeds of decay had been already planted, Rehoboam acceded on the death of Solomon—a foolish and headstrong son following a wise but willful father. Externally, the kingdom was at its greatest height of prosperity. Internally it was toppling to its fall.

We think of Solomon's magnificent building projects and his lavish expenditure of wealth as in some way connected with his wisdom. They were more closely allied with his folly. For all of this money came by taxation. Up to a certain point it was the legitimate fruit of prosperity; beyond that, the tyranny of an oriental despot. Evidently the dissatisfaction of the people had reached an acute stage. They were upon the verge of insurrection.

To Rehoboam was given an opportunity to win the support of the people by mitigating the severity of his father's taxation. He refused to do so, and determined to pursue the course of an arbitrary despot. This decision made an opening for the demagogue Jeroboam. There was a successful revolt. Rehoboam's proud boasting was turned into cowardly flight to the stronghold of his capital. Ten of the twelve tribes fell away from him. The nation was divided forever. So profoundly may the foolish act of a little man in a great place affect the destiny of nations.

Perhaps it was better that the nation should divide. God's plan did not contemplate the building up, under his protectorate, of a great world power which should use his favor to make itself great among the nations. Israel's mission was religious, not political, and as long as the kingdom endured it was necessary to fight against the tendency to subordinate religious to political ends. In fact, that was doubtless the fundamental objection to the establishment of the monarchy, as expressed by Samuel. It was a great part of the message of the prophets to protest against the current over-emphasis on political and material greatness, and to assure the people that the fulfillment of God's purposes did not depend upon Israel's becoming a strong world power or even upon maintaining political dependence. The division of the kingdom was the first of a long series of events which pruned back the political growth of Israel that her religious life might have opportunity to develop.

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of urine difficulties. If it did there would be few children who would do it. There is a constitutional cause for this. Mrs. M. The chances are it can't help it.

A GREAT BOOK FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Young Man from Middlefield

By MRS. JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

THIS ENTRANCING STORY of twenty-six chapters ran as a serial in the columns of OUR YOUNG FOLKS during the first half of the year 1900, and was followed with absorbing and ever-increasing interest by the many thousands of readers of that weekly journal. It relates, in the popular author's most charming style, the trials and triumphs of a plain young man from the country, who left his father's farm and went to the great city to fill a position in the lumber yard of his uncle. In his new surroundings he came into contact with a variety of people, every way different from the plain, honest country folks with whom he had formerly associated; but in the midst of his new surroundings, with their many temptations, he maintained his Christian integrity and lived up to the motto he had adopted, to "Make Christ First in Everything."

His good influence soon began to be felt in his uncle's family, among his fellow-workmen, and most of all among the young Christian Endeavorers with whom he associated, whose society was in due time revolutionized.

EVERY YOUNG PERSON should read this charming volume, and it should at once find a place in every Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school Library.

SIZE AND PRICE.—One handsome volume of 257 pages, beautifully printed and substantially bound in cloth, price 75 cents per copy, prepaid.

WAYS OF CONSECRATING OURSELVES TO OUR COUNTRY.—Rom. 13:1-7; 1 Pet. 2:13-17.

For the Leader.

Our topic for to-night is one in which every one can take a lively interest. We are within one day of the great day of our nation. The anniversary of that memorable event in our national history, the declaration of independence, is at hand again. If there is anyone in this community who will not rejoice in this day, yea, more, if there is one in all the land who can find no pleasure in the thought that is now uppermost in our minds, let him not get under the cloak of religion. Let him not try to hide under the leaves of holy writ. The texts of the scripture readings are plain upon the matter of Christians being partakers in the affairs of the civil government. It is, according to these scriptures, not only a privilege, an opportunity, but a duty. It is not left to us to say, but we are told that we must render to each his due. Let the study of this meeting bring out all that may be reasonably expected of such a topic.

For the Members.

1. Someone has said that our country is made up of all the good causes and good people in it. So, then, any service done to any of these is done to our country. It is as Jesus said in his description of the judgment, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me," we serve our country in a very practical way. If anyone is not willing to render service in this way, his debt to his country will never be paid. The great occasions, the times of dress parade, the days of talking and speech-making are the favorite days of many. When the days for the actual doing of things come they are off. But such must not be our way, if we are meaning to do what we can for our country.

2. If we are to study how best to consecrate ourselves to the good of our country we must have a thorough knowledge of it. And in this there is great joy. What a fascinating story it is! No country has a more interesting history. It has all the minor features that make a history cling to the memory. It has its stories of heroism. It has its tales of privation. Its wars in the interest of humanity are not without interest. Its resources are wonderful. Take its minerals, its lumber interests, its grain fields, its fruits, its factories, its great mountains, its navigable rivers, its scenery, its commerce, its peoples from every nation under heaven—is there not room in this field of study for the most stolid and stupid?

3. There can be no consecration of ourselves to our country without reverence for the same. Who will consecrate himself to the good of any country if he have not the love of that country at the bottom of his heart? Patriotism is but another name for love of country. There is no place for anarchy in the Christian view. Everyone must be a loyal citizen. And why should it not be so? This is our native land, or else it is our land by adoption. Here we have the blessings of a free country. The tone is Christian. The institutions are built upon the Christian conception of the world, of the church, of God. One may go wrong here, but he does so of his own accord. Everything in the genius of the government favors the Christian course of life. Let us love this our country.

4. But we should not be lured into the belief that the matter of serving our country ends in sentiment. Work is called for. A free country cannot long endure without the faithful work of its Christian citizens. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, we have long heard, and we should remember that ceaseless toil in the interest of the right is the price we must pay for the perpetuation of a great and good country like our own. The ballot is the matter of first importance with us. And yet it is surprising how many do not care to exercise this sacred privilege. And some even take ground in the name of religion against the exercise of the elective franchise. All who have the right should exercise it. It is the only effective means with us of correcting things that get wrong in our government. Vote. Vote early. Vote as you pray.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Oh, Lord, have I really seriously considered the question of how I can best serve my country?

PATRIOTISM AND RELIGION.

When our garners are full, affording all manner of store:

And our sheep bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our fields;

When our oxen are well laden:

When there is no breaking in, and no going forth,

And no outcry in our street;

Happy is the people that is in such a case:

Yea, happy is the people, whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 144:13-15.

This topic is suggested in view of the approaching anniversary of our nation's birth, the Fourth of July. It unites together what should never be separated, patriotism and religion.

Material Prosperity. The psalmist describes, in the verses quoted above, a country blessed with abundant harvests, having full garners and meadows clothed with flocks of sheep. Surely our country has been blessed with material prosperity above many if not all of the other nations of the world. Our soil, our climate, our mineral wealth and our series of abundant harvests have made our country the abode of plenty. This is only the basis, however, for real greatness.

Political Freedom. A condition of peace and of political prosperity is indicated by the psalmist when he says, "When there is no breaking in, and no going forth;" that is, no attacks from without and no sallying forth to meet such attacks. "And no outcry in our streets;" no sudden alarms. Thanks to the fathers of the revolution who, under God, achieved our national independence, we are in a large measure free from the entanglements and ambitious schemes of old-world powers, and are left free to carry forward our own national plans and ideals, not in selfish disregard of the welfare of other nations, but interposing only where we may extend the blessings of peace and political freedom which we ourselves enjoy. Our free school system, our separation of church and state, with the consequent religious freedom thereby secured, constitute our strongest defence against foes from without and from within. Upon the intelligence and virtue of our people, more than upon our army and navy, our forts and arsenals, do we rely for the perpetuation, and transmission to other generations, of the priceless heritage of freedom which we enjoy.

Basis of Civil and Religious Liberty. "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord." The passage clearly teaches that the source of all permanent national peace and prosperity, is the recognition of God and obedience to his laws. This is not only the affirmation of holy writ, but is the lesson taught by the history of the world. Nations can stand permanently only as they stand in righteousness. When they pervert justice, oppress the people, heed not the cries of the poor and needy, and cease to execute righteousness in the earth, they cease to be of service to God and to humanity, and soon pass out of existence. If there are some exceptions to this rule, God's justice is only delayed that he may execute it more perfectly when the cup of iniquity of such nations is full.

God's Hand in Our National History. "He hath [not dealt so with any nation]" (Psalm 147:20). From the very beginning of our history in this continent, it is easy to trace the guiding hand of divine Providence. It is evident that it was the divine purpose to plant here on this continent, between the two mighty oceans and the lakes of the north and the gulf of the south, a free republic in which the rights of man should be sacred, where equality of opportunities should be enjoyed, and where religion should have free course to run and be glorified. And this not for the benefit alone of those who should dwell beneath the flag of such a nation, but for the benefit of the whole world, that others catching the inspiration of our example might be led on to larger measures of freedom in matters both civil and religious. Such has been the influence of this nation upon the world. They are the best patriots, and serve their country best, who seek to promote intelligence and righteousness, and a reverent regard for God and for religion, in all our homes and schools, in all our halls of legislation, and in all our social and industrial life.

Prayer. Almighty God, we thank thee for this nation which thou hast established here in the western world for the accomplishment of thy great purposes for men. We pray for its peace and its purity. We pray for the president of the United States, for his cabinet, for congress, for governors of states and state legislatures, and for all who are in authority, that they may lead righteous and godly lives, and so conduct the affairs of state and nation that the blessings of freedom which we enjoy may be transmitted unimpaired to those who shall come after us.

Our Budget

—"The work starts off nicely at Maryville."
"H. A. DENTON."

—The Scoville meeting at Moberly, Mo., resulted in 123 additions.

—Z. T. Sweeney and family are "doing" the World's Fair this week.

—J. Murray Taylor preached the dedicatory sermon in the beautiful house of worship at Vienna, Va.

—Last week the Foreign society received a gift of $100 on the annuity plan from a friend in California.

—"A Life Purpose" was the title of J. H. Smart's baccalaureate sermon for the Danville high school.

—The ladies of the Maccabees attended in a body to hear J. D. Hull, of Parkersburg, W. Va., last Lord's day.

—The membership at Oaktown, Ind., writes Willis N. Cunningham, will either remodel or build a new church this year.

—G. F. Bradford, pastor at Eureka, Kan., preached the I. O. O. F. memorial sermon in the Christian church at that place.

—Christian university at Canton, Mo., is aiming to endow with $25,000 the Bible department in honor of D. R. Dungan.

—The churches at Sedalia have agreed to hold a union meeting in a tent that will seat 3,000 people. A noted Philadelphia evangelist will lead.

—The contract has just been awarded for the new $45,000 Christian church at Kokomo, Ind., to replace the edifice that was burned some months ago.

—The dedication of the Christian church at La Monte, Mo., will be celebrated on July 3. L. L. Carpenter will be the preacher. J. H. Rhodes is the pastor.

—J. C. Coggins, of Black Mountain college, North Carolina, recently delivered the baccalaureate addresses at Kenley academy and the Pantego high school.

—Paul E. Wright reports that the churches at Mt. Sterling and Cantril, Iowa, have given the largest offering this year that they have ever taken on children's day.

—L. A. Chapman closed his work at Grand Valley, Ont., last Lord's day and begins at Mechanicsburg, Ill., on June 26. Clark Braden succeeds him at Grand Valley.

—Sixty additions have been reported up to the end of the fourth week in the meeting at Perryopolis, Pa., where R. A. Omer is the evangelist and J. M. Bell is the pastor.

—The Religious education association will hold a meeting at the hall of congresses, World's Fair, Wednesday night, June 29, in connection with the National education association. All are invited to attend.

—The work of the Central church at Columbus, Ind., is prospering under the leadership of W. R. Jinnett. The pastor has been very busy for the past few weeks delivering special addresses in and about his home town.

—For the week ending June 15 the receipts for foreign missions from the Sunday-schools amounted to $9,118.47, a gain of $313.38 over the corresponding time last year. There was also a gain of 90 contributing Sunday-schools.

—The children's day offering of High street Sunday-school, Akron, Ohio, was $500. John G. Slayter's Bible-class gave $143 of that amount. The combined offering of the church and Sunday-school will be at least $1,250.

—R. E. Stevens has resigned at Port Williams, N. S., after a five years' pastorate, to accept a call from the church in Gas City, Ind. He has already begun his new work, but Port Williams has not yet selected its preacher.

—It was not $208 which the Hopkinsville Christian church Sunday-school raised May 29, but its offering was $290. That is still better, and we congratulate its up-to-date superintendent, Thos. W. Long, for this splendid result.

—G. M. Knox, of Bertram, Texas, was a pleasant visitor at the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST last week.

—We very much regret the illness of Bro. D. Munro, which has necessitated his relinquishing the corresponding secretaryship of the Michigan state work. Bro. C. M. Keene has been selected to serve in that capacity for a time.

—The Christian church at Tuscola, Ill., was attended by the Knights of Pythias in a body. "The World's Need" was the subject of the memorial sermon by Bro. J. T. Davis, which, according to the local papers, was much enjoyed by the visitors.

—One of our correspondents, in sending an account of the work in his congregation, reports most of the members as in "cold storage." Cold storage is all right at this time of the year for provisions, but it ought not to apply to Christian effort.

—The national Christian Bible-school association will hold its summer convention at Lake Maxinkuckee assembly Aug. 11-14. Anyone desiring programs or other information write the secretary, Chas. M. Fillmore, Cincinnati, Ohio, Station P.

—Martin L. Pierce and wife are spending the summer at Winona lake. He is preaching for the churches at Waterloo and Ashley, where he expects to locate regular pastors before returning to his school work in the school of evangelists in the fall.

—Harry G. Hill, secretary of the Education society, spoke at Columbus, Ind., last Lord's day. He reports that the interest in all the colleges is growing, and that the brotherhood will reap the fruits of this sowing. Brother Hill's time is fully taken up until the first of July.

—The state Endeavor convention is to be held in St. Louis, at the Second Baptist church, corner Beaumont and Locust streets, from Thursday of this week until the following Tuesday. Bro. A. McLean, of Cincinnati, is announced to give an address Thursday evening.

—George L. Snively, of our Benevolent association, is to dedicate the new church in Pittsburg, Pa., of which J. D. Dabney is pastor, on the last Sunday in the month. Three services will be held during the day and a courteous invitation is extended to all Disciples near the city to attend.

—The San Marcos river camp-meeting, Texas, will commence on June 24. Perhaps never before in the history of the Christian church in Texas have such arrangements been made for a great meeting. B. B. Sanders, of Austin, and R. R. Hamlin, of Ft. Worth, are to be the preachers.

—The church at Baton Rouge, La., was dedicated June 19. We have not yet received a report of the proceedings, but from the expectations and announcements beforehand, we are sure they were enthusiastic and that our cause has gained very materially by Brother Haddock's devotion at this place.

—"Consecration week" is being observed more and more. The Irving Park church of Chicago, has just had one of these quiet periods. John R. Ewers, of the University of Chicago, who is also acting as pastor of the church, preached for five nights during the week. As a result there were 13 additions to the congregation.

—J. F. Stone will close his work with the First church, Findlay, Ohio, June 26. He has not yet decided where he will locate. During the past year he has delivered 112 sermons, and there have been 53 additions to the church. Brother Stone has made a point of distributing tracts and literature and has put out over 6,000 copies.

—Judge Durham, of Irvington, Cal., writes: "We are sorry we cannot come to your big show, but the California exhibit will make some of the doubters open their eyes." People have been opening their eyes a good while over the things they have heard about California, and no doubt this exhibit in the World's Fair will get them pretty wide open, so much so that several of us are going out to California in the autumn of 1905 to see whether these things be so.

—G. F. Assiter, referring to the resignation of J. N. Scholes from the Island, Wheeling, W. Va., church, says that he is able to voice the sentiment of the entire Christian community which is one of deep regret at Brother Scholes' resignation. Tempting offers from churches seeking an able pastor are apparently not moving him from his resolve to enter the evangelistic field.

—It is planned that F. M. Rains and wife shall visit England, Denmark and Norway this summer to look into the work in these countries. They will sail from New York July 2 and expect to be gone about six weeks. The executive committee feels that it is a good thing to keep in touch with the churches that receive aid from the society.

—Leander Lane, of South Omaha, Neb., delivered the memorial address at Laurel Hill cemetery, which has since been published by the request of the veterans' and woman's relief corps. It has received high praise in the local press. The new church building there will be begun this week. Brother Lane will spend his vacation at Santa Cruz, Cal.

—We wish we could receive more news information like that conveyed in Bro. Hawkins' Maryland letter. The kind of news that is valuable concerns itself with the struggles and the successes of a church. Why do not more of you preachers and correspondents take Ian Maclaren or Ralph Connor as examples and paint and picture the occurrences in your church life, not merely record them?

—There has been no increase in the missionary force in China for ten years. Since the Boxer troubles the country is open as never before and China is asking that the force be doubled at once. The war in the east is making Japan more accessible than ever. The sympathies of the American people and of the English people are proving most helpful to the cause of missions in the sunrise kingdom.

—J. C. Hanna reports that the statement we received from a correspondent about his having been called to the church at Pawnee, Okla., is a mistake. He received a call to Ripley and Quay, Okla., but did not accept. He is now ready to locate with some church in southern Iowa, Missouri, or Illinois, being compelled to make the change by reason of the health of his wife. He may be addressed at box 466, Laurens, Iowa.

—Prof. C. L. Loos spent several days in the city last week, having come over to serve as witness in a suit. He availed himself of the opportunity while here of seeing a good deal of the World's Fair. He is in his 81st year, but is about the youngest man for his age we know of. It is beautiful to grow old thus, walking in the sunlight of an eternal youth. He goes in a few days to Orchard Lake, near Detroit, Mich., where he spends his summers.

—The last Sunday that S. D. Dutcher preached in Oklahoma City, prior to returning to Omaha, Neb., there were three added by obedience. More than $650 was raised on the debt on the new church. The debt is now reduced to less than $5,000. The congregation can pay it off at any time it becomes necessary. This is now one of our good churches. It ought to stop sampling preachers, though, and call a good man and not let the work drag for one day.

—Bro. and Sister A. C. Rankin, of Adelaide, Australia, are visiting America and have taken in the World's Fair. We had the pleasure of hearing Brother Rankin preach at the Central church on Lord's day. He is atypical Australian, which means that he has a great deal of the English in his manner and speech, and is one of the more progressive of our Australian brethren. Brother Rankin is wide-awake and means to learn all he can from his visit to America and Great Britain, where he will go next. He is writing some letters for several Australian daily papers. He reports the work amongst our churches in his country as very promising and wishes that some of our strong American preachers could make a tour of that great southern land in the interest of advancing our cause there. Brother Rankin was at the Bible college, Lexington, Ky., some sixteen years ago.

—The following card reaches us just as we go to press. Brother Dungan and family will have the sympathy of the entire brotherhood. Sister Dungan was widely known and greatly beloved for her good works.

"My wife died in this city this afternoon at three o'clock. She has been a faithful servant of Christ for 50 years. She has been here three weeks to-day for treatment. She was the mother of eight children, six of whom are living. Two sons and a son-in-law are in the ministry. Her work was done and well done. Quincy, Ill., June 20. D. R. DUNGAN."

—The newly organized church in south Chicago is giving evidence of great promise. R. L. Wilson preached the union memorial sermon recently from the standpoint of the son of a southern veteran. His sermon was so well received that the G. A. R. host will attend the services in a body next Sunday night. There are now forty members in the church and additions are being received at nearly every service. We rejoice with Brother Wilson that his new field of work is so promising.

—The ministers of the Christian church seem to be in great demand as preachers of memorial, baccalaureate and other special sermons. We fear that in another year we shall either be compelled to take it for granted that this is a part of their regular avocation and so common that it is hardly worth recording in print, or else start a special column for this class of news item. It speaks well for our ministers that so many of them are signaled out for these occasions.

—J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, has just been visiting his former church at California, Mo., where he preached to a crowded house on the subject, "The Greatest Question of the Day." Brother Vance reports that it was a masterly, logical and convincing plea for the union of God's people. Brother Vance further intimates that Brother Rudy is contemplating a tour of the churches in Missouri. Should he so decide, no doubt very many churches visited by him would be greatly strengthened.

—On Sept. 21 there will sail from San Francisco the steamship "Korea," bearing 15 of our own foreign missionaries, 10 of whom will be going out to China and the other five to Japan. These all go under the auspices of the Foreign Christian missionary society, some of them returning to their fields of labor, but most of them going out for the first time to consecrate their gifts and education to the cause of world-wide evangelism. This is the largest number of missionaries we have ever sent out at one time.

—Already eleven new missionaries have been appointed by the Foreign society, which began the year with the expectation of sending out twelve new missionaries and raising $250,000. All these are urgently needed, and perhaps two or three more will be appointed. If the society could send twice as many the needs would not all be supplied. It should not be forgotten that every new missionary sent out causes a permanent increase in expenditures. On this account the $250,000, suggested at the beginning of the year, should be raised before the last day of September.

—George A. Miller, of Covington, Ky., has returned from his oriental trip. He reports that owing to the excellent work of the First church, led by Milo Atkinson, who was minister during his four and a half months' absence, he found the work in better condition than when he left it. Brother Atkinson is a young man of much promise and Brother Miller thinks that the church that secures his services will be very fortunate. Last Lord's day there were 390 in the Sunday-school, and the audience filled the auditorium even after extra benches and chairs had been provided. Brother Miller begins his eleventh year's ministry with this church under the most favorable conditions.

—Pres. B. A. Jenkins, of Kentucky university, together with Professors Milligan and Willis of the same institution, were in the city a few days last week putting in place the exhibit of Kentucky university, which, by the way, is one of the most imposing in our pavilion. Christian college, Columbia, also has a very excellent exhibit. Some other school exhibits have been received, but have not yet been put in place. All our colleges should be represented in this building. There is a constant stream of visitors to it from the time it is opened in the morning until it is closed in the evening, and it keeps the young ladies in charge busy answering questions, handing out tracts and pointing out interesting features in the various exhibits.

—One of the pleasant parts of the dedication of the World's Fair building was the presence on that occasion of Frank G. Tyrrell, who has just had a very serious and, indeed, dangerous illness. Brother Tyrrell ought not to have been present, but could not withstand the temptation to be with his brethren on such an occasion. On the following Sunday he listened to Brother Zach Sweeney preach in the Mt. Cabanne pulpit and himself officiated at the Lord's table. Brother Tyrrell and family have left for Colorado where he will spend a little time at Fort Collins to recuperate before he enters upon the chautauqua work, which will occupy him during the summer, if his health permit.

—During J. E. Lynn's six years' pastorate at Springfield, Ill., he received into the churches there 775 people: 381 by baptism and 394 by letter and otherwise. $49,000 was raised for all purposes; $7,581 being for missions. At the farewell reception a great many testimonials were given by a number of prominent church workers in the city concerning Mr. Lynn's work in Springfield. The church presented Mr. and Mrs. Lynn with a handsome clock, and the ministerial association of the city expressed its esteem by a two-volume edition of Gen. Hoar's Autobiography. Brother Lynn began his ministry at Warren, Ohio, with an overflowing house. A roll call day of the membership of the church has been arranged for the second Sunday in July.

—The Editor, who went down early to the state convention at Carrollton, Mo., reports by telegram that the woman's convention was a great success. Mrs. Atkinson's presence and address were greatly appreciated. The same officers as last year were elected: President, Mrs. M. M. Goode, St. Joseph; vice-president, Mrs. S. E. Lampton, Bowling Green; recording secretary, Mrs. H. A. Denton, Maryville; corresponding secretary, Mrs. L. G. Bantz, St. Louis; treasurer, Mrs. J. P. Pinkerton, Kansas City. Several preachers were present on Lord's day and all the pulpits were filled by representatives of the Christian church. Great audiences attended each service. The large auditorium, at which the communion service was celebrated, was packed. The Endeavorers have been holding an enthusiastic session, and constant accessions to the delegates present are being made. Everything points to a good convention as we go to press.

Ministerial Exchange.

The church at Port Williams, Nova Scotia, is looking for a good preacher to succeed Brother Stevens.

Any church desiring pulpit supply or planning to locate a graduate preacher should address the Ministerial Association, Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio.

The church at Milton, Oregon (a town of 1,200, eleven miles from Walla Walla), desires a preacher. The church has 175 members and is free from debt. Address J. W. Stone.

Thomas J. Easterwood would like to hear from points in the south, especially Indian Territory, Oklahoma or Texas, wanting revival meetings. Address at Burton, Kan.

Thos. J. Thompson is now located at Carthage, Ill., preaching for nearby churches and doing evangelistic work. He can be had for one or two meetings on short notice. Address box 102, Carthage, Ill.

N. G. Buckley, pastor of the Wallace St. church, Chicago, has been granted a vacation for July and August, and offers his services to hold a meeting, for the free will offering, for any church within 75 miles of Cairo, Ill., No. 556 116th street, Chicago.

California Colonies.

We call attention of our readers to the advertisement of Brother J. P. Dargitz in this issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Bro. Dargitz is making a commendable effort to locate members of the church of Christ who emigrate to California on good land and near together, so that their lives and efforts may be more effective in behalf of the current reformation, and that they may be more contented and prosperous. He is corresponding secretary of the state missionary board of California, but this enterprise is on his own individual responsibility. He is well known and of good reputation. Write to him and he will give you full details of the colony plans.

Northern California Convention.

The missionary convention of northern California will be held at Santa Cruz, beginning July 18 and continuing until July 31. Thursday, July 21, will be missionary day, at which time the Foreign mission society will be represented by some able men, whom they will select: the Home society, by R. P. Shepperd, of Pomona, Cal.; American Christian education, by Dean Hiram Van Kirk; Church extension, by W. F. Richardson, Kansas City, Mo.; National benevolent association, Geo. L. Snively, St. Louis, Mo. This will be the great day of the convention. It will be filled with missionary zeal and instruction. None can afford to miss it. Brethren, meet us at this great feast of good things. A. C. McKEEVER.

News From Many Fields

Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Our missionary district includes the above territory and a few churches in adjoining states, viz.: Martinsburg, Va., Antioch at Vienna, Va., and Waynesboro and Fairfield in Pennsylvania. There were two houses of worship dedicated in our territory June 12, the one at Lansdowne, Md., about five miles from Baltimore, the other at Antioch, near Vienna, Va. The former church is a frame building with brick basement. It is 561 1-2x32 feet; actual cost $3,200, though the value is counted greater. The first story has Sunday-school rooms, with main room, primary and Bible-class rooms, robing rooms and a kitchen. There are two towers on the front; one has the entrance. From the door a short stairway leads down to the Sunday-school room, another up to the auditorium. In the opposite tower is the study, and between the two the pulpit, with baptistery in the rear, sliding doors separating it from the pulpit. The floor rises toward the rear, and the pews are circular. There is no waste room in the building.

This church has a history. About five years ago Bro. J. B. DeHoff, one of our preachers in Maryland, moved to Lansdowne. The M. E. church did not have preaching all the time, and they invited him frequently to preach, which he did, telling them he took the Bible only as his guide. They became interested, and after a time W. J. Wright assisted him in a meeting, and a church was organized, as Christians only. One M. E. brother held a mortgage on the meeting house for $1,500. As about all the congregation had gone with the new movement they used the church, but the conference contended for it, and was awarded the building, but must pay the mortgage with interest. Brother Hull put this and more into a new building, and at the dedication presented a deed for the church and two lots to the trustees of the Christian church. He is an enthusiastic Grand Army man, and a peculiar feature of the deed is it provides that the second Lord's day in May each year is set apart as a day in which services are to be held for the G. A. R. Representatives of the G. A. R. of Maryland were present and accepted this day as theirs. Other orders attended some of the services of the day. There was a debt of about $700 for the furnishings. About $500 was raised. W. J. Wright preached the sermon. Other preaching brethren from Baltimore participated in the afternoon. The writer assisted in the morning and then moved on to Vienna, Va., for the service at night. This Antioch church is a neat frame building 48x30 feet, with a tower at one corner, the vestibule within the building. On one side of the pulpit is the choir box, and the other a library, and in the rear space for a baptistery and robing rooms in the future. The ceiling is neatly wainscoted, and it is furnished with good pews. It is a great credit to the sacrifices of Bro. J. T. Watson, the minister who worked with his hands and preached, and to the other members who so ably assisted.

Hereby hangs another story. Efforts were made a few years ago to establish a church in the village of Vienna, but the work was soon disbanded. Near where the new church now stands, an M. P. church stood until last August. Some of the members had been expelled by an eccentric pastor and a part of the flock. Others withdrew. They started a Sunday school in a school house. Concluding they were no longer Methodists, they decided to call it a Christian school. Bro. Joel Grayson, a valued employe in the document room at the capitol in Washington, and his family joined with them, having been members of the original movement at Vienna. Brother Grayson last summer drove a hundred miles to a convention in Virginia to seek a preacher. J. T. Watson came Aug. 26. The night before lightning struck and burned the M. P. church. A meeting was begun in the school house and, outgrowing it, they went to the grove, and when it became too cool, stopped. Eighteen were baptized, 15 of them from the M. P. church. A church was organized with 35 members; 10 have since been added. Bro. J. A. Dyer, one of the members, put a double door between two rooms, and had "the church in his house" until the new building was ready. C. C. Dyer gave the lot. The corner stone was laid on Thanksgiving day, 1903. The new church was dedicated June 12, 1904, amid great rejoicing.

J. Murray Taylor, of Washington, preached the sermon in the afternoon. E. B. Bagby did the soliciting, and $1,000 was provided for. J. D. Hamaker, of Strausburg, Va., preached morning and night.

The church at Downsville, Md., W. S. Hoyer minister, had a rally day and roll call on June 12. There was a large attendance; three accessions, and $28 raised for the American Christian missionary society. The largest amount raised before for that purpose was about $9.

Southern California.

L. C. Haulman has been called to the pastorate of the church at Oxnard. He is already on the field at work.

The church at Covina, J. W. Utter, pastor, has entered upon a new era of prosperity and service since the dedication of their new building. They have planted the cause in a mission at El Monte.

A. B. Markle, minister at Anaheim, will visit the World's Fair in September and attend the great convention of Disciples at St. Louis in October.

J. S. West has been called to serve as minister at Ontario for another year. His work prospers.

Reports at the monthly preachers' meeting indicate that most of our churches took the offering for home missions.

R. P. Shepherd has his heart set on leading the Pomona church to the "living link" line in foreign missions this year. The March offering was $168, children's day offering was $210, leaving $122 yet to raise before the goal is reached. This is already a fine record in an off year in the orange tree state.

L. O. Newcomer's fifteen months' ministry at Glendora has been greatly blessed. One hundred and twelve persons have been added to the membership and the church has developed wonderfully in all good works.

The Lord is adding daily to the number of Disciples at Boyle Heights. J. P. McKnight is preaching each night in a tent, and 22 have been added in two weeks. Arrangements have been perfected that insure the success of this new church in southeast Los Angeles.

W. H. Martin reports the Santa Barbara church as having recently added improvements to its building amounting to $40. An auxiliary to C. W. B. M. has been organized. They send an omnibus to the suburbs and gather in the children to their Sunday school. Recently a most capable preacher in good standing among the Baptists, a Mexican by birth, allied himself with the Disciples under the ministry of Bro. Martin. This man should immediately be put to work among his people.

We have to chronicle the death of one of our most efficient pastors, John Richard Shie, recently of San Bernardino. Your obituary columns have given some particulars of him. F. M. Dowling preached the sermon, interment taking place at beautiful Evergreen cemetery. Almost all of our ministers were present to express their heartfelt sympathy with the bereaved family.

The corner stone of the new $10,000 building at Long Beach has been laid with appropriate ceremonies. W. T. Kendrick, of Los Angeles, made the address. The building committee expect to dedicate during the August convention.

W. G. Conley, who serves the church at Redlands, has been granted a vacation of two months, with salary, and supply provided. He will take a trip east during September and October. A princely way to treat a pastor! But then Redlands is an ideal church, and her beloved pastor a princely man.

The annual convention of the Christian churches in southern California will be held at Long Beach, August 11-21. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., and Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Emporia, Kan., will be among those who from outside the state will be present to add interest to the meetings. The splendid talent in our own churches—and the church has no better anywhere—will be freely used. Prof. Rugby, of Pasadena, will conduct the music.

GRANT K. LEWIS.

Virginia.

C. R. Sine, of Duluth, Minnesota, has accepted a call to Charlottesville and will begin his labors there July 17. This is a good church and should accomplish much under the leadership of Brother Sine.

W. H. Book recently held a short meeting at Blackstone, a college town with 2,500 inhabitants, which resulted in the organization of a congregation with 31 members. R. H. Jones is the competent pastor of this young church.

H. D. Coffey, under the direction of the V. C. M. S., has just closed a meeting at Pemberton with 60 accessions, more than 40 of them by baptism.

C. O. Woodward held a short meeting with Wm. Phillips at Fredericksburg. There were ten accessions.

W. J. Wright is expected to attend district conventions in Virginia in July and August.

F. G. Linkons has recently begun evangelizing in New River district under the direction of the V. C. M. S. His first meeting was held at Alleghany, his home church. There were 19 accessions.

The month of July has been selected as the time for the special offering for Virginia missions this year. Every church is expected to take the offering. From the present outlook this will be the largest offering ever made to Virginia missions.

C. O. Woodward recently held a meeting at Fairmount, a suburb of Richmond, where Hugh Sublett is the effective and much loved pastor. Brother Woodward became hoarse and Brothers Haley and Atkins helped him out. There were 31 accessions.

The brethren at Bedford City have their Sunday-school room ready for service. The house will be completed later on.

A new house is just completed at Oak Grove church near Chatham. C. E. Elmore is pastor.

The new church at Park Place, a suburb of Norfolk, was dedicated the second Sunday in June by J. T. T. Hundley, pastor of the Norfolk church. This congregation has only 23 members, but in less than a year it has obtained a church house.

E. J. Willis, of Bristol, will hold a meeting for S. L. Jackson at Chilhowie in July.

Rappahannock and Sueyona are making love to G. A. Watson, of Middletown, Va. This would be a good match.

Seventh street Sunday-school raised $577 children's day. We think that is the best in the south and east. C. T. Throckmorton is the wide-awake superintendent.

Marshall street Sunday-school has sent its check for $40 for state missions, and says there is more coming. This is the best Sunday-school offering this year. W. J. Kimbrough is the superintendent and B. H. Melton is the pastor of the church.

Marshall street church, under the effective leadership of B. H. Melton, is planning for a new church. Brother Melton is one of the men who do things.

Roanoke, led by the consecrated W. G. Johnston, is out of debt for the first time in many years.

Seventh church has just given a reception to J. J. Haley and wife. A good time is reported. H. L. COMBS, Fin. Sec. V. C. M. S.

Our Western Letter.

If you read the daily papers, and you certainly do, you have probably received an impression that the people in Colorado are passing through a genuine reign of terror. The reports that have gone out are lurid. You will make no mistake if you discount them at least from fifty to seventy-five per cent. The impression that lawlessness prevails in the centennial state is destitute of a substantial foundation. Life and property are as safe in this commonwealth as in any one of the five and forty states constituting the North American republic. The only apparent exception to the absolute correctness of this statement is in the Cripple Creek region. Nor are the disturbances and outrages in this small section of the state occasioned by bona fide citizens of Colorado, nor ought the real working man to be held responsible, in the last analysis, for the outrages which have, for a time, brought disgrace upon the fair fame of our commonwealth. There have been unrest, disorder and a degree of violence in the mining districts of the state for a year or more. But these constitute a small portion of Colorado. Mining is neither our most important nor most valuable industry. Our farms, gardens, orchards and vineyards are more valuable by millions of dollars than are our mines. Note well this fact. It is important. The disturbances in our mining camps have been gendered by men who are not citizens of the state and who have not a dollar invested in any kind of property. Nor are they working men. They are demagogues; they are agitators; they are interlopers; they are disturbers of the peace; they are breeders of strife; they are thoroughly selfish; they are shrewd and conscienceless. The Western Federation of Miners is socialistic and anarchistic. This is true of the leaders. There was no dissatisfaction among Cripple Creek miners when these marplots began their evil work. The eight hour day was established and had been for a long time. Wages were to the working men satisfactory. Five thousand men were at work under good sanitary conditions. Three thousand were members of the union; two thousand were non-union men. The conditions were as nearly ideal as can be found in such a place when the professional agitator began to get in his work.

I am writing with deliberation. I am measuring the significance of my words. Statements diametrically opposed to these you have read. My statements will probably be called in question. For these reasons I am placing words on paper with care.

The issue in Colorado is not between labor and capital. The issue is between the law-abiding and the lawless. The burning issue in the affected districts in Colorado is as to the right of men to work who are not members of a labor union. Governor Peabody has used the militia of the state to protect the working man—union and non-union. There is general agreement that the death of a dozen or more men the morning of June 6, by the explosion of a bomb under the platform of a railroad station when non-union miners were waiting for a train, was the work of the men of whom I have spoken. This is tacitly admitted even by the papers that apologize for lawlessness. It is said that at the present time life and property are more safe in the Cripple Creek region than for some time, which is probably true. The drastic measures that have been employed are bearing satisfactory fruit.

Michigan Notes.

The state convention held at Adrian, June 6, 9, was one of the best of Michigan's many good conventions. Owing to the continued sickness of Bro. D. Munro, he was not able to be present, and this was the one shadow upon the otherwise happy gathering. Brother Munro has been compelled to give up his work as corresponding secretary, and this is a source of regret to many. The report of the work done under the direction of the state board during the past year was very inspiring.

The Adrian church, which so splendidly entertained the convention, is an illustration of Michigan's wonderful possibilities. Two years ago a little handful of Disciples were meeting in an upper room to break bread; now more than 100 members assemble in their own large, splendidly equipped church building, with a seating capacity of about 400. Brother Huntsman, who has led them in these splendid achievements, has resigned, to the regret of all, and will spend some time in Australia visiting his aged father and preaching the gospel. His successor has not yet been chosen.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year: President, W. B. Taylor, Ionia; vice-president, G. P. Coles, Ann Arbor; second vice-president, C. J. Tanner, Detroit; recording secretary, J. C. Muse, St. Louis; treasurer, H. B. Peck, Ionia; Y. P. S. C. E. superintendent, Brother Horn, Fremont; Sunday-school secretary, F. T. Porter, Belding. District managers: First district, E. A. Jennings; second district, C. M. Keene; third district, F. P. Arthur; fourth district, Mrs. Brown; fifth district, J. T. Greene; sixth district, J. S. Raum; seventh district, T. P. Ullom; eighth district, Brother Jefferies. From this board the following persons were chosen to serve as an executive committee: W. B. Taylor, F. P. Arthur, G. P. Coles, C. J. Tanner, and C. M. Keene. C. M. Keene was chosen to serve as corresponding secretary for a time.

It will be the policy of the board to sustain all work already begun, and reach out into new fields just as fast as funds will permit, and a special effort will be made to reduce the indebtedness that now confronts us.

V. H. Miller has located with the church at Petersburg. Benj. Merry has taken the work at Duplain. A Brother Johnson from Kimberlyn Heights is spending his summer vacation with the church at Decatur. Bro. C. O. Purdy, of Kimberlyn Heights, has accepted a call from Coats Grove and Sibewa, and is already on the field. A. S. Martin has accepted a call to a Chicago church. Bro. Will Bellamy, of Evansville, Ind., will locate with the Fifth avenue church, Grand Rapids. F. T. Porter will become the Ionia evangelist located at Belding, where W. H. Kindred has done a fine work during the past year. Two added by letter at Paw Paw, June 12. Let all communications concerning state work be sent to,

C. M. KEENE, Cor. Sec.

For More Workers.

The missionaries in India appeal for more workers from the home land and set forth their needs as below:

1. The station at Hatta has been selected and suitable buildings erected and the work commenced under very promising circumstances; but by the necessity of the workers, being called upon to take the management of the orphanage in Damoh, the work has been left without a missionary. A missionary is therefore needed to go to Hatta.

2. A male medical missionary is needed to be manager of the orphanage at Damoh, that he may take over its work when Mr. and Mrs. Rioch return to America on furlough in 1906.

3. An educational missionary is needed for Bilaspur and one for Harda.

4. A new missionary is needed to open up the station of Kota, near Bilaspur.

5. Two new missionaries are urgently needed to enter into new fields adjoining our present stations.

6. A medical missionary is needed to take up Dr. Drummond's work at the time of his return to America on furlough in 1905.

7. We need a carefully selected man to take the management of the manual training of the Damoh orphanage in 1906, when Mr. and Mrs. Rioch will return to America on furlough.

Our needs are imperative. The King's business requireth haste. To delay or refuse our request for these missionaries is to delay the kingdom of God, while souls walk in darkness and are outside the blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. We ask for these missionaries, because all of them are needed now, not in the distant future. If every worker for whom we appeal were present in India at the time of writing this appeal he would with difficulty be prepared to take the work of the posts to be made vacant by furloughs. We therefore appeal to the executive committee of the F. C. M. S. to help us accomplish victories which we know are possible, for we have witnessed them in stations where our work has been in progress a few years. May the Lord so guide you that this appeal may not be in vain.

Commencement Season, Drake University.

This season covered nine days, June 6 to 15. The weather was almost perfect. Looking back over these days it is almost impossible to see where anything could have been better done. An unusual tenderness pervaded the whole season, for little could be done without bringing to mind and heart the name of the founder of the university. No one went out of the way to mention the name of Bro. F. M. Drake, but the occasion often demanded it. His memory shed a tender luster over all these days.

In all departments there were 208 graduates. The college of law had 32. It held its exercises on the evening of June 7 and was addressed by Judge Smith McPherson. The dean of this college recently celebrated his eightieth anniversary, but on commencement day spoke like one good for twenty more years of service. Judge Cole, or Dean Cole, as we call him, is now supervising the erection of the new building for the college of law which is going up on the campus between science hall and the main building. The corner stone will be laid on June 20.

On June 9 the senior class of the Drake academy, consisting of 48 members, was addressed by Dr. J. Everest Cathell. This address was one of the best of the week. He also spoke for the Drake primary training school on June 13. One-fourth of this class, which is now the freshman class of '05, are also students of the college of the Bible.

On June 10 came the senior class exercises of the school of oratory under the direction of Professor Claude Davis. These exercises were in the form of a drama and were highly appreciated by the packed house. Professor Davis undertook a very hard task in succeeding Professor Ott two years ago, and has made a good record.

The baccalaureate sermon on June 12 was preached by Dr. J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis. He also spoke in the evening at the annual exercises of the college of the Bible. It was a great privilege to have Brother Garrison with us and to hear him on these occasions. His themes were very appropriate and well presented. All were sorry that he could not stay through the remainder of the commencement season. He returned home with hearty wishes from many for his welfare.

The college of the Bible is looking forward with much glad anticipation. One year from this time it should be in its new building, made possible by the last public act of Gen. F. M. Drake.

The enrollment in the college of the Bible this year has reached the total of 152. Of these none this year reached the degree of B. D. The demand for men by the home and foreign fields is so great that it is impossible to carry many preachers far enough for this degree. Next year Justin Brown and Charles Settemyer would have received it but the Foreign board has called and they leave us for work in China. The college of the Bible claims five of the postgraduate class, ten of the senior class, twenty-eight in the lower classes of the college of liberal arts and twelve in the senior class of the academy.

The school of Christian workers is the youngest department of our university work and is a continuation and enlargement of the pastoral helpers' school, lately under the care of A. M. Harvuot, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Our pioneer graduates from this department are Miss Edna Prutzman and Mrs. America Sea.

On June 13 Pastor Charles S. Medbury delivered the address for the seniors of the normal college. It is needless to say that this was a fine address. No man has the faculty of saying the right thing at the right time better developed than has Brother Medbury. He is in great demand for public occasions in Des Moines and in the state. In fact, he has a national reputation as a speaker of great force.

On June 14 came the president's reception to the graduates, alumni and trustees. This is always a happy affair, and this year was more so than ever. In the evening a great audience listened to the musical program by the conservatory of music. Dean Frederic Howard is on the ocean en route for Europe, where he, with Mr. Saylor, will spend the season chiefly in the German and French musical worlds. In his absence this program was under the direction of Miss Lois Adler. I am not competent to adequately comment upon the exercises of this evening. It was all that the best judges could ask. The conservatory building was dedicated last fall, and the first year of work in it has been very gratifying. There were twelve graduates and an enrollment of 369. We fear that the new building will have to be supplemented by another very soon. One of the great things which Chancellor Craig did for Drake university was the discovery of Dean Howard and Miss Adler. Chancellor Craig laid the foundation for one of the greatest conservatories of music in the west. Their building was the gift of General Drake. Many friends of the university will be glad to know that Dean Howard will have charge of the music in University place church for the coming year.

The board of trustees met on June 15. Their annual dinner was served in the home of Pres. Hill M. Bell. Everyone speaks of the meeting as one of the most harmonious and important meetings of recent years. Since the departure of Governor Drake, who was its president for many years, every member feels a greater measure of responsibility, and this fact was manifest in this meeting. In the absence of President Sawyer, of Centerville, J. H. Stockham presided. The debt of the university now unprovided for is probably smaller than it has been for five or ten years.

The senior class gained no little fame for their presentation of the drama, "Much Ado About Nothing." Professor Smith, who trained them, received many compliments for his splendid work. I cannot say all of this entertainment that it deserves.

Two hundred and eight persons received their diplomas on graduation day. It was a great day. President Bell presided. Dr. Edwin Earle Sparks, of Chicago, gave an address that will long be remembered and ranked with the very best ever heard on Drake commencement occasions. The weather was matchless and the alumni banquet at the Savery hotel was a fitting close of the day and of the commencement season. Nearly two hundred sat down at the tables. Pastor Frank L. Moffett, of Centerville, was toastmaster. He very happily introduced the following persons, who ably and wittily responded: Sumner Siberell, A. B., '87; Kate S. Harpel, M. D., '02; Judge James A. Howe, LL.B., '89; Blanche W. Pinkerton, A. B., '04, and Pres. Hill M. Bell, A. B., '90.

The college of medicine sent out a class of thirteen, and has closed its first year in its new building. Dean Fairchild is continually strengthening this college. The dental college sent out nine graduates, the college of pharmacy had twenty-two graduates, and the business department had twenty-five. Honorary degrees were conferred upon John B. White, of Adel, Ia., and upon Pres. A. B. Storms, of Ames agricultural college.

It is now two years since Chancellor Craig left us, and Pres. Hill M. Bell took charge. President Bell has demonstrated that he is a worthy successor of his able predecessor. He has maintained and increased the attendance; he has successfully piloted the university more than half way through its great era of new buildings; he has put the university upon the most economical basis it has known for some time, and not many years should elapse until deficits should become unknown; he has shown himself a master of detail and a leader among men, he has the respect of the student body and the warm support of the faculties. His friends have good reason to congratulate him, and the university has in him and the board of directors hope of a great future. ALFRED M. HAGGARD.

EDITORS { W. W. DOWLING, Editor Our Young Folks, METTA A. DOWLING, Editor The Young Evangelist.

This New Paper is issued weekly and consists of eight pages of three columns each, printed on fine book paper, bran-new type, in the best style of the art, and as far as appearance is concerned, will not suffer in comparison with any similar paper in the land.

For Whom Intended. THE ROUND TABLE is a paper for wide-awake, bright-eyed Boys and Girls in their "early teens," who are a little too old for The Young Evangelist and not quite far enough along in years and in their tastes and acquirements to be greatly interested in the material which goes into the columns of Our Young Folks, which is intended for young men and women who are engaged in Bible Study and Christian Work, especially along Sunday-school and Endeavor lines.

Its Contents. THE ROUND TABLE is quite distinctly a "Story Paper," five of its eight pages will usually be occupied with Serial and Shorter Stories, always pure in tone and instructive in character, with fine illustrations. The remaining pages will be filled with Table Talks on a great variety of themes; Odds and Ends of useful information; Outlines of the Sunday-school Lessons and Endeavor Topics; A Puzzle Drawer full of Riddles, Charades and Problems, to exercise the wits of young readers, and in each issue a sufficient amount of Pepper and Spice to keep its readers awake and smooth out any wrinkles that may have a tendency to gather in their faces.

Subscription Price. One copy, one year, 50 cents; in clubs of five, to one address, 40 cents each; in clubs of ten or more to one address, 36 cents each. Quarterly subscriptions at proportional rates.

Arkansas—Its Resources and the Opportunity for the Disciples.

Arkansas is doing things with remarkable success and swiftness. But for the World's Fair in our neighboring suburb of St. Louis we would be tempted to believe that Arkansas is the center of the Louisiana Purchase. It is certain that no other state is attracting the business interests of the country as is Arkansas. The natural resources of the state are just being discovered and their development is just beginning. The mineral wealth of the state is far beyond the most sanguine hopes and expectations of its friends. Vast tracts of timbered lands are scarcely touched by milling interests. But railroads are building, mines are opening, sawmills are locating. Add to these interests the cotton industry and secondarily the grain interests and the fruit producing interests, for which Arkansas is justly famous, and you have the basis for unprecedented development in all material lines. The climate is all that could be desired, neither hot in summer nor cold in winter.

Arkansas is the seat of the greatest health resort in the United States, if not in the world. One hundred thousand people visit Hot Springs annually. And the people are coming to Arkansas by thousands every year. It has been an almost unknown country, the butt of ridicule and the target for almanac jokes for years. But Arkansas is not to be "sneezed at." It is one of the coming empires of the union.

Little Rock is the seat of this empire, a city of 60,000 people, having doubled its population in 15 years. It is thought it will have 100,000 in 10 or 15 years.

What are the Disciples doing in this awakening state? "There is a sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees." The Disciples are stirring. There has been great progress in the six years I have known the work. There are more and a higher grade of preachers, more churches with settled pastors, better houses of worship, more missionary money and work, a better spirit, anti-ism is hiding in the fastness of the mountains, ashamed to show its face. The Disciples in Arkansas feel that theirs is a winning fight, a rising and not a setting sun. The Methodists, South, are the strong people of the state and will meet us at every town and village. The Baptists are numerically strong, but constitutionally weak. Their methods are primitive; their doctrinal practices obsolete and repudiated by intelligence and culture; internally they are at war. They will present a weak resistance to our advance.

Outside of these two bodies the field is ours by wise and faithful administration. Other bodies are putting large sums of money into the work, but accomplishing less than we are with meager means. Our people are united, energetic and hopeful. Fayetteville, where Brother Ragland has ministered for eighteen years, has a splendid house of worship. Ft. Smith, where Brother Edmonds has ministered for twelve years, will soon dedicate a magnificent stone church. Brother Bullard and his faithful people in Texarkana will soon dedicate a beautiful $20,000 house. Brother Kincaid and the Hot Springs church have bought a fine lot and will build a splendid house soon. Other points are talking of building.

In Little Rock the cause is growing. Two years ago Bro. C. B. Stevens took charge of the work in North Little Rock, where there was a discouraged little congregation. He has done a good work in a difficult field. He now leaves the work, and some good man is wanted at once to take it up. The First church is prospering. I am about to complete six years of service with this people. Never has a pastor found more cordial welcome or earnest, loyal support than here. The success of the work is due first to the people, who are workers in a true sense. Seventeen years ago a neat and comfortable brick house, costing about $6,000, was erected. It has served the needs of the congregation during these years. The congregation is planning for a larger and better house now. We have outgrown the old building. The needs of the congregation demand more room and more modern equipment. The spirit of the times demands it. Church pride, a legitimate and laudable quality, demands a house in keeping with our religious neighbors. Accordingly, we are planning to build a house that will cost about $35,000 complete.

Bro. Z. T. Sweeney was with us May 12-16. While here he directed the raising of a new church subscription. We have secured $22,000 in good subscriptions. The work will begin this fall. When our plans are consummated, we shall have a house equal to the best in the city. The future outlook is full of promise. The church has a flourishing mission in another part of the city, and if the right young man could be found, he would be put in charge of this work at once.

Many Disciples are coming to Little Rock. I should be pleased if pastors knowing of members coming here, would write to me of them.

J. N. JESSUP.

Little Rock.

A Storm Experience and Eight Converts.

Last Sunday evening I was invited to visit a settlement called "Eden Valley," twenty miles northwest of this city, and to unite in marriage a couple of young people of the neighborhood. It was arranged for the marriage to take place in the little school house. So when we arrived there we found the people of the entire settlement assembled, and although the "shack" was only 16 feet square, many more could have found room within. All the afternoon the low rumbling of distant thunder was heard and the sky was black and lowering. And before the ceremony was over the storm burst upon us with all its fury. At the first gust of wind and hail a window gave way, when hats and bonnets and other loose property swirled out of the window and, swifter than the "buster" can sail the plains on the back of his "bronco," they rode the winds until the branches of distant "muss-keet" caught and held them. The "parson's" new Panama enjoyed such a wild ride. Meanwhile, the "shack" was rocking and quivering, and threatening to go to pieces at any time. The little audience "lined up" on the west side and succeeded in "holding it down." The young couple had been pronounced "man and wife," but the guests were too busy trying to hold together the school house to join in congratulating the pair. The roar of wind and rattle of hail, the neighing of horses and rumbling of overturned vehicles, all contributed toward making it exciting and a time long to be remembered. After a short while, yet it appeared almost like an age, the storm abated. The young folks joined in the singing of familiar hymns, among them "When the Storms of Life are Raging," "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms," etc. I read a lesson from the word of God and after prayer delivered a discourse on "The Great Salvation." As the rain kept falling I kept preaching, and for one hour and a half I presented to them the claims of him who stilled the winds and waves on the sea of Galilee, and who alone can quiet the raging tempests of the soul. When the song of invitation was sung eight persons came forward, seven to make the good confession and one to renew allegiance to the great Shepherd of the sheep. The next morning after searching diligently for our lost property, most of which was found scattered on the prairie round about the school house, we met the seven souls who had confessed Christ, and buried them with their Lord in baptism. After promises to return to them again soon, we turned our "cayuse" toward home, deeply impressed with the greatness of this western country as a mission field. We arrived at home only to find a committee waiting to urge me to visit a point south of our city to hold a meeting and assist them in building a new church.

Truly the harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few; come over and help us.

Commencement at Cotner University.

Cotner's commencement was a most joyous and successful one this year. Splendid progress has been made in the work of the school under the guidance of the worthy chancellor. The faculty has been able and loyal, supremely devoted to the unique ideals for which Cotner stands.

The student body, exclusive of medical and summer school students, has been the largest in Cotner's history. Vigorous work is being done in the field that will increase the attendance next fall.

The commencement opened with the splendid baccalaureate sermon by Bro. N. S. Haynes, pastor of the First church in Lincoln. The college societies presented excellent programs. The head of the school of music, Prof. Lola Mix Sutton, with the university chorus, presented the "Prodigal Son," an oratorio of exceptional power. The large audience showed great appreciation. The proceeds cleared the last payment on a fine piano and provided funds with which to give an oratorio next year. The school of eloquence, under the leadership of Prof. Harry Trumbull Sutton, presented an admirable program.

The climax of the week was reached on commencement day when B. O. D. S. Dutcher, of the First church, Omaha, delivered the commencement address upon the subject, "All Things are Yours." At the close of the address Chancellor Aylsworth bestowed the honors of the university upon a class of fourteen from the different schools.

The alumni program closed the week's activities. J. W. Hilton of the class of '98 delivered the address upon the subject, "Educational Ideals." At the alumni business session F. S. Pettit, 1900, was elected president and Prof. Grace E. Young, '97, secretary and treasurer.

The chancellor will spend his summer lecturing and conducting institute work with Prof. G. P. Coler of Ann Arbor and others.

Work upon repairing the buildings of the university has begun. Everyone looks forward to the best year in the history next year.

Messages from Our Home Missionaries.

Southern California reports: "New churches have been organized at Los Angeles (south-west), La Habra, Holtville, Ocean Park, and some mission points near San Diego. Also Santa Maria has been re-organized after a long silence and is now working nicely. A nice mission has been started at Boyle Heights (Los Angeles) and another at Arlington. Also the work at Bisbee, Arizona, has been strengthened. We expect soon to begin work at Monrovia and Colton. Redlands has started a mission in North Redlands. Brothers Crabtree and Smith, of San Diego, have done some work at San Luis Rey, Otay and Escondido. The work nearly everywhere is in fine condition. Pastors are faithful and efficient. The work is in a very satisfactory condition.

"J. P. RALSTIN, Cor. Sec."

W. G. Oram, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends the following message: "I am very happy to be able to report to you that the contract for our new chapel has been let, and according to contract we are to have it by Sept. 4. People are feeling good and everything is as encouraging as could be under present conditions."

Jas. R. McIntire, an evangelist in Oklahoma, says: "At Sparks there is an anti organization of fourteen members; about fifty other members in the town and within five miles, not in this organization. This work will be slow, but in a few months a good church can be built.

"Visited Fallis three times. Building will depend upon work of farmers (no male members in town) and must wait until after cotton planting. Meeting as soon as building is ready, in September or October. Prospect good.

"Cashion—a good building will soon be ready for dedication. They desire a meeting to follow dedication. Building delayed by wheat failure."

J. Frank Green, Mt. Pleasant, Mich., reports: "We are growing in numbers. Our attendance is also increasing. At present rate of interest it will not be long until our debts will be diminishing. Our church is about ready to don a new dress. The requisite amount of money is being raised by our Sunday-school class, consisting of 23 young people. The C. E. society is paying the electric light bills, amounting to about $50 per year. Our missionary offerings have both been taken and full apportionment raised. I feel that we, as a church, are not doing our whole duty and living up to our obligations, yet I feel encouraged, too, by the spirit of liberality manifested by many, and the sweet Christian spirit which permeates the entire church."

Christian University Commencement.

Commencement week opened Sunday, June 12, with the baccalaureate sermon by Judge C. J. Scofield, of Carthage, Ill. The sermon was a great one, and made a profound impression. In the evening of the same day six young men were ordained to the ministry. Just recently seven others had been ordained, making thirteen who have been set apart to the ministry at the close of this college year. Their names are as follows: P. W. Krah, J. M. Rhodes, G. H. Bassett, E. M. Carr, V. L. Goodrich, J. T. Webb, E. E. Francis, B. S. M. Edwards, J. B. Weldon, B. G. Reavis, D. G. Dungan, A. C. Hitch and P. A. Parsons.

Monday evening the university guild gave a reception and supper in the new building. The beautiful structure was fully lighted up for the first time, and it presented a fine appearance.

Tuesday was field day for the athletic association. The various classes contested for a silver cup given by President Johann. The seniors won. Tuesday evening was occupied by the B. H. Smith oratorical contest. The judges gave the medal to J. B. Weldon by a very narrow margin.

Wednesday morning the students held a meeting in the chapel which had been advertised as "Somethin' Doin' at Chapel." It turned out to be a burlesque on the faculty, which was enjoyed by members of the faculty as well as by students. Wednesday evening came the faculty contest, a contest in which the faculty gives two medals, one for declamation to ladies and one for oratory to gentlemen. Miss Dora Nelson won the medal in declamation and C. A. Baird in oratory.

Thursday morning at 10 o'clock came the graduating exercises. Mr. P. A. Parsons and Miss Birdie Clay from the graduating class and Stephen Davis from the postgraduates were the speakers, and their productions were pronounced good.

At 2 p. m. occurred the dedication of the new building. Secretary F. M. Rains of Cincinnati was present, and asked the people for money as he alone can do. After the raising of money was completed, Congressman Lloyd, a graduate of this institution, made an address suitable to the occasion. The dedicatory prayer was then made and the concourse dismissed. Thus ended the most auspicious and hopeful day known to Christian university for many years. The crowd was large, the enthusiasm unbounded and hope supreme.

Thursday night commencement doings were concluded by a cantata—Rebecca, given by students for the benefit of the university, in Starr-Miller opera house.

One of the most significant things that occurred during commencement week was the organization of the Dungan Bible college endowment association. The aim of this association is the endowment of the Bible department in honor of D. R. Dungan. It aims at not less than $25,000.

The sad feature of this joyous commencement is the fact that Mrs. Dungan lies at the point of death at her daughter's home in Quincy. Dr. Dungan and all the children have been at her bedside several days. Many prayers are daily offered for her recovery.

A Pastoral Epistle.

Dear Friend: I am sending this letter upon the subject of church attendance to all members of the church. It is the outgrowth of much thought and observation. No particular events have called it forth at this time. It is what I have been inclined to say many times and what I desire to have kept in mind in the future.

Some people go to church as they would to an entertainment. They desire to be pleased and to hear their opinions confirmed. Or they are curious and seek something new. Such people are very ready to criticize and to be irregular in their attendance. Others have a higher sense of loyalty to the church. They feel that it is their "duty" to participate in the worship and they often patiently endure much in the service and in the preaching which does not appeal to them, or even offends them.

I am always troubled to find people of either class in my church. I should like to have the first class possessed by higher motives so that they would feel a responsibility to contribute something to the good cause by their presence and by an interested and sympathetic attitude. I should like to have the second class gain from the service something more than the sense of having performed a hard though noble duty. They should be quickened, strengthened and guided by it.

But the real difficulty lies deeper than this. I desire to encourage a large and generous spirit of devotion to the church and religion. The individual should be free in his worship of God and in his discipleship to Christ. He should have a vital and spontaneous attachment to the church. So far as I recall I have never asked a member why he was absent from a service or why he does not attend more regularly. I give people credit for understanding that the very fact that many of us put our souls and talents into making the church life and worship the best we can, keeps us keenly sensitive to the attitude and conduct of every individual member. Your regular and intelligent participation in the services is always solicited. If you think for a moment that you are free to treat the whole matter lightly and according to personal convenience, then you have not taken your religion or your church seriously enough.

Assuming that we all agree that the Sunday morning service is the most important public service of the church and that it should be maintained at the highest pitch of interest and efficiency, what reasons are there why you should make an effort, if necessary, to be present every Sunday?

In the first place it would soon establish itself as a habit and eliminate much of the questioning on Sunday morning as to whether to go. As it is, many people consult the weather, or their feelings, or the subject of the sermon, or the attractions at other churches, or their work, or their pleasure, or their company and easily find an excuse. Or they read or parley until they say, "Oh, well, it is too late to go now, anyway." All such things are easily brushed aside by the habitual church goer, just as they are on a week day for a man who is in the habit of going to business at a certain hour.

In the second place, the church life means much more to the regular attendant. He develops a social feeling for it. The occasional visitor is apt to think the church cold and uninteresting. Familiarity with the atmosphere and spirit of a church can not be gained by the hit or miss plan. Regular attendance upon a service which is worth supporting at all increases one's sense of its value and one's responsibility for it.

A third reason for regularity is the importance of bringing to bear the full force of the members and personnel of the church upon the minister and musicians and in a reciprocal way upon the members themselves, and especially upon strangers. Each one counts for this. Some one is encouraged by your presence and some one is disappointed by your absence. This is especially true in a small church, where each has an important place and part. In our congregation many members feel this responsibility and have established habits of regular attendance. I know that nothing but sickness or very unusual circumstances will keep them away. If this were true of all, it would immeasurably enrich and deepen the life of the church.

Is it too much to expect you to set aside one hour and a half on Sunday morning for the church—your own church—and to allow nothing to interfere with attendance upon its services?

YOUR PASTOR.

[This letter, written by a pastor to his flock, has been deemed worthy of a wider circulation, dealing as it does with a very living and practical problem—that of church attendance. If any one feels that he has as good reasons to offer why he should habitually absent himself from the house of God and the weekly assembly of the saints, we shall be glad to publish them.—Editor.]

Good News From Our Churches.

"While at South Sharon, I took the first missionary offering the church has ever given. While it is not large, it is a starter. My work is going nicely. Have had 297 added to the churches since Sept. 1, 244 by baptism."

F. A. BRIGHT, Evang. W. Pa.

"Enclosed you will find ten dollars ($10.00) gathered from 'Scattered Disciples of Christ,' who have no home but are all working hard to secure one. And if we don't succeed here on earth, we will still believe we are laying up treasure for a home on high where Christ our crucified Savior reigns."

JOHN S. KINKAID.

Clearwater, Idaho.

Pleasant Grove Church, Bryantsville, Ky., sends in $44.35, a total gain over last year.

Uniontown, Pa., makes a gift of $225.00.

"Our Home Missionary offering will reach $60.00."

A. H. SEYMOUR.

Arlington, S. D.

This church sends an increased offering each year. These brethren are growing in missionary zeal, and are giving liberally for the advancement of the Lord's cause.

The church at Metz, Ind., makes an offering for American Missions of $70.43, which is more than double the amount sent in last year. We rejoice over the increase in so many of our church offerings.

Burbank, Cal., sends the following message with their offering:

"We are a small band, only about a dozen members, and not all of them contributing members. Although our offering is not large, I can assure you it represents real self-sacrifice on the part of some of those making the offering and it is sent with much prayer that it may be used of God for the winning of souls in this land."

ARKANSAS.

De Queen, June 13.—Three additions: one baptism, one reclaimed and one from the Baptists. Congregations small. Most of the members in "cold storage," but a few are earnest and faithful. Our faithful and much loved corresponding secretary, Bro. E. C. Browning, will be with us this week, and will stay until we get into our new house, as he has the work in hand. We hope to have the house completed in a few weeks.—W. O. BREEDEN.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, June 13.—One from the Baptists yesterday at H street. Observed children's day at the evening service, and reached apportionment—fifty dollars.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago Heights, June 13.—We had two additions at the close of the evening service: one by letter and the other by statement—a husband and wife. Our Sunday-school has almost doubled since we began our Sunday-school revival.—HARRY E. TUCKER.

Chandlerville, June 13.—One addition yesterday at the morning service from the M. E. church. The outlook is bright.—T. L. YOUNG, pastor.

Chandlerville, June 13.—Children's day a success. Apportionment $15, raised $23, and will likely reach $25. The outlook here is hopeful.—T. L. YOUNG.

Chicago, Irving Park church.—Thirteen added: four by baptism, seven by letter, and two by statement. All heads of families except two young men and one young woman.—J. R. EWERS.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, June 13.—Sunday-school at Omega raised $30.66 at the children's day exercises. This field is just getting into line for missions.—CHAS. E. UNDERWOOD.

Indianapolis, June 13.—Children's day exercises at Oaktown were largely attended; the collection was about $30. We organized a Christian Endeavor society with about 20 active members. Miss Hazel Shapp, president, Miss Estelle Band, corresponding secretary.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Muskogee, June 14.—We closed our meeting here last night. There were 53 additions to the little church. We ought to have a strong church in this booming city. Bro. J. H. Crutcher is the pastor. I expect to begin a meeting in Garden City, Mo., in a few days.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

IOWA.

Creston, June 13.—Our church and Sunday-school observed children's day yesterday, with large audiences morning and evening. A fine program at night and eight additions two by confession. Others were hindered by sickness and will come later.—R. H. INGRAM.

Mar halltown, June 13.—Good services yesterday. Collection I. C. C. $40. Three added to the church.—F. H. LEMON.

KANSAS.

McPherson, June 13.—Children's day at McPherson was a great success. More than raised apportionment. The pastor, W. A. Morrison, recently delivered the baccalaureate address for the graduating class of the McPherson high schools. Also gave the memorial address for the Odd Fellows. The work at McPherson is prospering.—W. A. MORRISON.

KENTUCKY.

Middlesboro, June 14.—I began our protracted meeting here May 22, and Bro. F. M. Tinder, of Lancaster, Ky., joined me in it on May 25, and we continued until June 8, closing with six conversions, mostly from the Sunday-school. Brother Tinder did some grand preaching. It was a success.—E. R. CHILDEERS.

Mayfield, June 17.—In a meeting with the church here begun June 12, we had 10 baptisms in the first five days. The interest is great and the house crowded nightly. Bro. Roger L. Clark is the minister, and he had everything ready.—E. L. FRAZIER.

MISSOURI.

Flemington, June 13.—Two added by letter to the church at Prairie Valley, near Elkton, yesterday. The outlook is good there for a growth in the congregation. They think of building this fall. They worship in a school house.—S. E. HENDRICKSON, Weaubleau, Mo.

Warsaw, June 6.—One addition last Sunday by confession.—OLLIE DAVIS.

Potosi, June 13.—Three confessions at White Water yesterday.—I. B. DODSON.

Moberly, June 16.—Our meeting closed last night with 123 added, mostly by confession and baptism. Many families united. Grown people, in a large measure, made up the additions.—J. N. CRUTCHER.

California, June 15.—Two confessions at our morning service last Lord's day.—S. J. VANCE, pastor.

St. Louis, June 16.—Since my last report there have been 14 additions to the church at Elvins. Bro. Amos, K. Clarke, of Indianapolis, is assisting me in a revival. He is consecrated and earnest, and we look for a large ingathering of souls into the church.—JNO. G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

Queen City.—Children's day exercises here June 12. Program good, large audience, and the collection, $18.50, exceeded all previous collections by $5.50. The work here is in good condition. Two baptisms at prayer meeting recently. The Endeavor is active, and a great help to our church work. The Sunday-school flourishes under the efficient direction of the superintendent, Mr. Perley Lind. I have just entered upon my third year's work here. Have one Sunday at the Star in Macon Co. Their children's day exercises were good, and the collection, $6, was the largest they ever had.—J. P. FURNISH.

NEBRASKA.

Omaha, June 16.—Three additions to the First church last Sunday and three on the previous Sunday. The Greater Omaha Christian missionary society, of which Jud Slabaugh is president, had a rousing meeting at the First church recently.—S. D. DUTCHER.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, June 6.—A young lady from Bradford, Pa., visiting here for a few days, made the good confession last evening, and was baptized the same hour of the night.—B. S. FERRALL.

NEW MEXICO.

Roswell, June 15.—I preached at the school house in Eden Valley last Sunday evening, whither I went to join a couple in marriage. At the close of the sermon seven came forward to make the good confession, and one who had stayed away returned to the fold. They all take membership with the church at Roswell.—C. C. HILL.

OHIO.

Hamilton, June 13.—Three added yesterday morning. Two added at night. The work grows. Children's day offering largest in years.—A. M. GROWDEN.

Martins Ferry, June 18.—One added by statement last Lord's day. My engagements that day included a Bible-class, two public services, funeral, wedding, baptism and several visits to the sick. Quite a day of privileges. The baptism at night was a man from the Catholics.—G. F. ASSITER.

Akron, June 12.—The children's day offering for the Bible-school of the High street church amounts to $500. The Bethany Bible-class, taught by the pastor of the church, gave $143. The total offering of church and school this year will be a little better than $1,250, against $1,096 last year and $785 the year before.—JOHN G. SLATER.

Cushing, June 14.—I am in a meeting here. Two confessions to date. Meeting three days old.—OSCAR INGOLD.

OKLAHOMA.

Guthrie, June 9.—I am now in my fifth year as pastor of this church. During the fourth year there were 124 additions to the church, with 14 additions elsewhere. I married 13 couples, and conducted 19 funeral services. All departments of work prosperous.—J. T. OGLE.

OREGON.

Corvallis, June 10.—May 8 we took our St. Louis mission offering which amounted to $18.25. Last Lord's day the Sunday-school raised $33 for support of our worker in China.—T. S. HANDSAKER.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Edenburg, June 13.—Closed a three weeks' meeting here last night. Six added by baptism and two by statement. Begin at Wind Ridge next Lord's day.—F. A. BRIGHT, evangelist.

Perryopolis, June 18.—Meeting in fourth week with 60 added.—R. A. OMER, evangelist; I. M. BELL, pastor.

TEXAS.

Cleburne, June 13.—We had two additions yesterday by statement. We are looking forward to a great meeting in July.—J. G. CREASON.

Garland, June 13.—Preached at New Hope, 10 miles from here, yesterday morning and evening. Had five additions by letter, one of which was from the Baptists. Junior Endeavor organized here with 25 members.—CHAS. CHASTEEN.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Parkersburg, June 13.—A promising young man made the good confession.—J. D. HULL.

WISCONSIN.

Ladysmith, June 13.—Yesterday we had five additions from the denominations, and one confession. Rolla G. Sears reports five recent baptisms at Werley, and one baptism at Packwaukee; also one from the Methodists at Werley. M. C. Wilson, of Perry, Iowa, began work June 1 at Rib Lake, under the direction of our state society.—H. F. BARSTOW.

WYOMING.

Sheridan, June 17.—Our Bible-school observed children's day last Lord's day. The apportionment of the school was five dollars, and we sent to Bro. Rains $16.44, had four additions to the church by letter, sent Brother Smith $10, which, with $5.25 previously sent him, makes the offering of our school $15.25 to home missions, apportionment $5.00. This church is not yet 18 months old. One other addition recently not reported.—F. E. BLANCHARD.

The Pulpit

Economy and Self-Denial.

By George Lobingier.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." John 6:12.

The greatest teacher of our race has taught us by example an important lesson in economy. On the deity side of his dual nature he had resources unlimited and unmeasured. Thousands came to him in the desert place. They hungered for physical food. The only food present on that occasion and at that place was found in five loaves of bread and two fishes. Because of his creative resources he could increase the power and volume of this food. Moved by infinite compassion, he exercised his prerogative and power, and food was systematically distributed, and the waiting thousands ate thereof and were nourished and satisfied. Strange to relate, "twelve baskets were filled with the broken pieces from the five barley loaves which remained over." What shall be done with these? The average American might answer: "Let these fragments be scattered hither and thither. Why care for or worry about such small affairs? Let the birds of the air or the wild beasts of the plains and hills find and use them. Will not these baskets encumber us? Has not a great festival been given through the smallest expenditure of means? Is this not enough?" But our matchless teacher answers: "Gather up the broken pieces which remain over, that nothing be lost." Nothing was lost on that occasion, and according to the divine standard nothing should ever be lost even in the infinite realm of God's great universe. God wastes no power nor does he ever lavish any element of force in all his vast dominion. He has never performed a miracle where "second causes" or the laws of nature would consummate his purpose. In short, it is economy on our part, of means and strength and time, that will receive God's recognition, smiles and blessing.

Here in a measure, beloved, you are secure and moving along the safer highway. The American people are said to be the most wasteful on the face of the globe. If true, it is to be deplored. It does not now, and never will, meet our heavenly Father's approval. In his sight it is more than foolish; it is displeasing and sinful.

You will note that the Scotch and French and Swedes are taught economy and thrift from the early years of youth to the period of womanhood and manhood. These nations never send additions across the ocean to our army of "tramps." Such parasites come from other races.

Ben Franklin through "Poor Richard" taught a lesson of immense value to those who heed it, when he said, "What will maintain one vice will bring up two children."

Mary Lyon was a poor girl in New England. She had a high purpose in life. Her aim was to live and accomplish something of lasting importance for her sex. For nine consecutive years she performed the humble duties of a domestic servant in her own brother's home, and received for the same the small sum of $1 per week. How pitifully small compared with the earnings of the average young woman to day! Whatever work she did for others was on a similar scale of compensation.

Her noble and unselfish ambition was to organize and equip a school, that larger opportunities might be had by the young women of that day and in the future in the way of education. After long patience and unwearyed effort she saw the building erected at Mt. Holyoke, Mass. She was witness to the beginning of the school and taught twelve years in the same, and was made to rejoice with joy unspeakable in seeing the going forth of splendid classes of teachers from its halls. Economy of means, means so very meager, and great self-denial, were large factors in this glorious consummation.

Listen for the moment to the testimony of a worldly man (the Master himself testified "that the sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of light"): It was in the year 1895 that C. P. Huntington was interviewed by a reporter of the New York World. Among other things he said: "I think that everyone should like to work better than anything else. When my son seems downcast or wants distraction of a healthful sort, I say to him, 'Sit down and figure out how much money you would have at sixty if you should save twenty-five cents every day; invest it and reinvest it, compounding interest every six months.'" Mr. Huntington considers that the world is inclined to misjudge; he had a friend who would not stick to anything for any length of time and who, of course, remained poor. That man would say, "Look at Huntington; I have more brains than he and I am poor, while he has millions—of course he stole them."

The value of invested money and the weird power of compound interest interested Mr. Huntington and furnished a text for him. "In 1609," said Mr. Huntington, "the Dutch bought Manhattan island for $37. You will say that was a bargain. I will show you the price was extortionate." If those Dutchmen had invested their $37 at seven per cent interest and compounded it every six months they would have now nearly ten billions of dollars, and that is a great deal more than the island will ever be worth."

While we should condemn the grind and greed element of compound interest in the lesson of Huntington, we may commend the lesson of daily economy and self-denial. For self-denial is learned in the daily practice of economy, and thus a habit may be formed which, if properly guarded and controlled, is of vast importance in life. The woman in the temple in the extreme straits of penury had something to give. She had saved that she might bestow. With marvelous self-denial, unobtrusively, out of the depths of her poverty, she gave to the Lord. She had an abiding conviction that no eye on earth saw the two mites in her hand and the motive in her heart. Yet an Artist was there, one who could open door after door of her soul. He could stand within the holy of holies of her spirit temple and unveil the most sacred incentives of her heart. Her character was chiseled on the bright, imperishable marble of the pages of holy writ. There it has shone with brilliant light ever since. There it will continue to shine for the admiration and inspiration of unborn millions.

Oh, ye butterflies of fashion and of "society," ye who flash in your jewelry and "flutter in your brocade," how vast the gulf between her regnant character and yourselves! Your reign is in a low and limited sphere and your influence is not for the betterment of the world. The Master himself hath crowned her for the ages.

Warwick gave the world an impressive lesson when he said, "Teach self-denial, make its practice pleasurable and you create for the Self-denial and self-abasement constitute two of the brightest crown jewels of heaven. Without these two basic principles thoroughly interwoven into the Master's great character he could never have worn the diadem of eternal sovereignty.

Self-indulgence and selfish pride lead the soul away from God through the wide gate and on the broad way, down into the realm of uncrowned humanity.

A Delightful Courtship.

In view of the progress toward union and its incident discussion, the following may prove interesting. The First Christian church and the Plymouth Congregational church of Long Beach, Cal., purchased lots nearly adjacent and both expect to build splendid edifices. Then began "a delightful courtship." I quote below what the Weekly Advance of the Christian church says of it.

GRANT K. LEWIS.

Considerable comment has been occasioned by the talked-of union of our church with the Plymouth Congregational church. That all may understand the status of the matter we here give a brief statement concerning it. After considerable conference the following items were suggested to the Plymouth brethren as a possible basis of union:

1. That the name be the Union church of Long Beach.

2. That the union be in the nature of a business corporation—a partnership of the two churches.

3. That each church preserve its own organization intact, and the membership of the joint congregation be increased by each church receiving into its fellowship in its own way individuals in accordance with personal preference.

4. That the property be held jointly by a board of trustees, and the management of the united congregation be in the hands of a council, composed of an equal number of members from each church.

5. That the doctrine to be proclaimed be that of New Testament Christianity, and the application and the emphasis of the same be left to the common sense of the preachers.

6. That the preaching be equally divided between the two pastors, but the worship and work of the joint enterprise be conducted as one church.

7. That this partnership may be dissolved at any time by either party and upon terms equitable to both.

8. That the union be endorsed by the state missionary boards of each church.

For reasons, wise and good in the judgment of our sister congregation, this platform for union has collapsed. Doubtless the plan is imperfect.

But the suitor's proposal has been rejected and the lover is disappointed. It is another case of continuing to be "only a sister." It is but right to say that the treatment of this church "which did a-wooing go" during the entire courtship was of such a tender nature, and the hesitating manner with which our sister church finally said "no" was so apparent that we can not help doubting whether she meant it. This leaves room to hope that if the suitor can gain courage to further press his case, he may be accepted and the marriage celebrated amid great joy and congratulations.

[The trouble with the plan of union proposed above seems to have been that it was rather too close for federation and not close enough for Christian union.—EDITOR.]

"The Church."

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—I read with much profit and pleasure your article on "Unconquered Land" in the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. I have just finished reading chapter VIII, and with some timidity I attempt to correct you in one important statement you make. You say, "No one of the great Protestant bodies, unless we except the Anglican church and its counterpart in this country, claims to be 'the church.'" Now in this you certainly mistake the claim of the Baptists, i. e., the missionary Baptists, provided you regard them as one of the "great Protestant bodies," because they positively hold that the Baptists alone are apostolic in faith and practice, and that Baptists churches are the only New Testament churches, and that these churches alone constitute the true church, the body and bride of Christ. I may modestly say that I was raised a Baptist, graduated at a Baptist school, Crozer theological seminary, and was a regular ordained minister of the Baptist church for ten years, so that I ought to know what they believe.

The better and more sensible way is, to employ a substitute to do the stomach's work for it and let that organ have a rest.

I also quote from Henry C. Vedder's "History of the Baptists," p. 22, "The church, in the broadest sense of the term, in the New Testament, includes all the regenerate living in obedience to Christ." And on p. 16, "The church is a spiritual body, consisting only of those regenerated by the spirit of God, and baptized on a personal profession of faith." And on p. 44, "It is certain, as impartial history and critics will allow, that the early church, including the first century after the New Testament period, was organized as Baptist churches are now organized, and professed the faith that Baptist churches now profess." I also quote from Dr. Hicox's "New Directory for Baptist Churches," p. 494, "If it be asked, when and where did Baptist history begin? who were the first of their honored line? without hesitation we reply, They commenced with John the Baptist or Christ, the Head of the Church, and the first of their faith were his disciples, constituting the primitive churches." I quote once more, from J. M. Pendleton's "Distinctive Principles of Baptists," p. 225, "Nor do we know of any people, besides Baptists, who maintain 'the whole truth' on the subject of a regenerate church membership, embracing, as it does, the vital point that we come to the church through Christ and not to Christ through the church and its ordinances."

I call attention to the above, not for criticism or controversy, but for the sake of the truth. Yours in his name, Belleflower, Ill.

J. D. WILLIAMS.

[The foregoing has been on hand some time, because it was overlooked. In reference to the point our brother makes, he is undoubtedly right so far as many Baptist authorities are concerned; but no representative Baptist will contend that the Baptist church is "the church," in the sense that there is no salvation out of it. This is exclusively a Roman Catholic dogma, accepted also by some high church Episcopalians.—EDITOR.]

The Voice of the Children.

During the Editor's recent visit to Drake university, at the close of one of the services, while many of the grown-up people were extending their greetings, we observed the presence of a small girl who extended her salutation and requested a hearing. She informed me that she came as the representative of a large number of the children of Des Moines to request that henceforth we have more continued stories in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. She remarked that there had been too few of such stories in the paper of late, and the children would be much better pleased if we could publish more of them. We assured her that her petition should receive due consideration. On inquiring her name, she told me it was Margaret Medbury. It was the little daughter of the pastor of the University place church. Meanwhile, we noticed a number of children standing off at a respectful distance observing how their envoy and representative would discharge her duty, and what effect it seemed to have. We like this direct way of asking for what we want, and we shall certainly try to accommodate these children, for we are sure that they represent a great many others, and some perhaps who are children of larger growth. Good story-writers are not as plentiful as strawberries, at this season of the year, but by some hook or crook what the children demand in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST must be provided. They like what Brother Ellis writes, but they want more of the same kind in the children's department. We hope soon to make some announcement that will be pleasant to the children.

The Silence of Butterflies.

After all, the chief charm of this race of winged flowers does not lie in their varied and brilliant beauty, nor yet in their wonderful series of transformations, in their long and sordid caterpillar life, their long slumber in the chrysalis, or the very brief period which comprises their beauty, their love making, their parentage and their death. Nor does it lie in the fact that we do not yet certainly know whether they have in the caterpillar shape the faculty of sight, or not, and do not even know the precise use of their most conspicuous organ in maturity, the antennæ. Nor does it consist in this, that they of all created things have furnished man with the symbol of his own immortality. It rather lies in the fact that, with all their varied life and activity, they represent an absolutely silent world. . . . All the vast array of modern knowledge has found no butterfly which murmurs with an audible voice, and only a very few species which can even audibly click or rustle with their wings; Darwin first observing these in South America, and others recording them at long intervals of years in Europe, and, finally, in the United States. Mr. Scudder has not only detected a soft sound in one or two cases, proceeding from the wings, and sounding like the faint rustling of sandpaper, but he hazards the opinion that many of the quivering or waving motions of the wings of these bright creatures, although inaudible to us, may be accompanied by sounds which the butterflies themselves or their kindred might hear.—T. W. Higginson, in the June Atlantic.

Curious Insect Mimics.

Many beautiful examples of mimicry are to be seen among the moths. The underwing moth, for instance, so closely resembles the lichen-covered bark of the tree on which it is in the habit of resting that it is often difficult for one to see it even when it is known to be there, and the dagger moth is also difficult to find at times. A question-mark butterfly with wings folded looks almost exactly like a part of the torn or partly eaten dead leaf on which it may be resting, and there are other butterflies in which the deception is carried still further. Some of the most extreme cases are to be seen among the tropical butterflies, a number of which are best known as "leaf-insects," from the fact that they look almost exactly like leaves growing from the branch on which they have alighted. The closed wings are to all appearances a leaf, the same in shape and color as any of the leaves about it. A prolongation of the hind wings touches the branch and forms the stem, which adds so much to the deception. A large midrib or vein runs down the middle, and from it radiates a system of smaller veins, very much as they do in a real leaf. Even the imperfections of the leaf are mimicked in some cases, and we find on the wings little spots which correspond to insect bites, mold and blights of various kinds, such as are frequently seen upon leaves. Our own common katydid looks so much like the bright green leaves among which it is feeding that we often pass it by unnoticed.

The "walking-sticks" are a group of insects which live chiefly on the trees and bushes, and take their name from their remarkable protective resemblance to the twigs among which they are found. They are most numerous in the tropics, but we have one species, the common walking-stick, in the United States. This is a slender, long-bodied insect which sometimes occurs in very great numbers in certain forests of the northern states. The young, most of which are hatched in the spring, are green, corresponding in color to the leaves at that season; but when they are adult, in the fall, their color has changed to gray or brown, to correspond more or less with the foliage. When the leaves have fallen they closely resemble the twigs on which they rest, stretching out their fore legs straight in front of them to give the finishing touches to the twig-like effect.—June Woman's Home Companion.

Training and Requirements of the Cossack Service.

Every Cossack is required to serve the Little Father twenty-four years—three years in the Preparatory Class, twelve years in the Field Class, five years in the Reserve, and four years in the Opol'tchenie. His training begins in his infancy. When forty days old, his mother takes him to the church, for the prayer of purification. When she returns, the father meets her on the threshold, takes the child, buckles a sword about his waist, and hands him back, congratulating the mother on having given birth to a Cossack. The cradle-songs by which the child is lulled to sleep are recitals of feats of arms of border warfare. At the age of three, he is taught to sit astride a horse; at five, he appears on the street on horseback, and joins with his young comrades in the mounted games. As he develops, the tribal traditions are ingrafted in his mind. They form the chief part of his education—beyond his plow, he knows of nothing but service in the army and war.

At the age of eighteen, he is enrolled and enters the Preparatory Class. The Cossack receives pay only when on active service with his regiment, and then the princely sum of three rubles forty-five kopecks per year, which in the war service is increased to six rubles, sixty kopecks.—From "The Cossacks: Russia's Unique Troopers," by Joseph A. Baer, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for June.

Russia a Babel of Races, Tongues and Religions.

The Russian population is perhaps the most mixed of all nations, and is made up in large measure of conquered peoples who still remember their overthrow with bitterness. Probably not far from one-third of the whole—from forty to fifty millions—are true Muscovites. Around the central Muscovites are grouped Lapps, Finns, Germans, Lithuanians, Poles, Little Russians, Ruthenians, Roumanians, Greeks, Georgians and Tartars, with Jews and Gipsies scattered through the south and west. These are all in European Russia, and this is nothing to the medley in Asiatic Russia, where there is an almost endless variety of races. Each of the races mentioned speaks a different tongue, and there are at least six different religions among them, without counting sectaries, such as the Dukhobors. Bitter political hatred of Russia burns fiercely among the Finns, Poles and Armenians; while symptoms of active revolt are reported among Georgians and Turcomans along the Asiatic frontier.—N. T. Bacon, in the June Book-lovers Magazine.

Unity.

By C. F. Ellis.

Jesus Christ the Father's Son,
Prayed alone in earnest prayer,
That his children might be one,
But how many of us care?

For now we have divisions,
With many a name and creed,
The world needs not religions,
But Christ is its great need.

Christians, let us all unite,
A mighty array we will be,
Always ready then to fight,
For we're sure of victory.

Then to God be all the praise,
Through Jesus Christ his Son,
Our voices then in song we'll raise,
For the world will then be one (won).

Courtesy in the Home.

By Mrs. Elsie Duncan Yale.

In the announcement of an old-fashioned "dame school" the worthy mistress offered instruction in needlework, penmanship and various useful arts, all for the low sum of two shillings per week, and added at the close, "Manners twopence extra!"

As we look about us in these busy, "strenuous" days, it is often our lot to fall in with those who, while well versed in arts and sciences, did not have the necessary "twopence extra for manners" expended on them in the days of their youth. There is too much hurry and bustle for the "small, sweet courtesies of life." Women jostle and crowd one another at the bargain counters; men sit in the cars, entrenched behind newspapers, in real or apparent ignorance of women clinging to the straps; children talk loftily of the "governor" or the "old lady," and it would seem that old-fashioned chivalry and politeness have become obsolete.

The root of the evil lies, no doubt, in the home. Here, in the very place where it would seem that that loving, thoughtful courtesy should prevail, it is often sadly lacking. The husband, while beyond a doubt cherishing a real affection for his wife, is careless and neglectful of the little attentions he once showed her. In the words of the late Max O'Rell, "He apparently considers that his wife has forfeited every claim to his respect by marrying him." If he should chance to meet her on the street, he does not raise his hat as he would to another woman. If she has prepared some especially appetizing dish, he enjoys it, but it does not always occur to him to express his appreciation. "Please" and "thank you" are forgotten, while "excuse me" and "I beg your pardon," are too often omitted.

The fault, too, may lie with the wife. In the courtship days she took pleasure in dressing to please the eyes of her lover, but when he became her husband, much of her regard for her personal appearance ceased. The girl who wore dainty blouses and trig shirt waist suits when she was engaged, too often dons, as a wife, an unbecoming wrapper for her housework, and the hair which was once "fluffy" too frequently merits the adjective "frowsy." The lover had his gifts greeted by an enthusiastic "How perfectly lovely!" but not infrequently a husband's gifts are received with "I really did not need that, John."

"But my wife knows that I love her," or "My husband knows that I love him, so what is the use of being formal?" is sometimes asked. No need at all for formality, but courtesy is a different thing entirely, and above all, those who love each other should not be neglectful of courtesy. The lack of it is too often "the little rift within the lute, that by-and-by will make the music mute." It is well for husband and wife to resolve that they will be careful of the courtesies of life, for human happiness often hinges upon seeming trifles.

Children should early be instructed, not in "company manners" which are obviously artificial, but in true politeness coming from the heart. Kate Douglass Wiggin, in her charming story, "The Birds' Christmas Carol," humorously describes the efforts of Mrs. Ruggles to instill into her progeny the essentials of polite behavior. They have lived in blissful ignorance of it all their lives, but an invitation to Christmas dinner makes a slight knowledge of etiquette necessary. Hence Mrs. Ruggles energetically drills and coaches her little flock, only to have her precepts promptly forgotten.

We laugh at Mrs. Ruggles and her lecture on deportment, but have we never been guilty of the same to a lesser degree?

"Company is coming," the children are told, "and you must behave like ladies and gentlemen. You must eat nicely at the table, and not talk much or interrupt anyone," and other wise counsels are given. But you cannot condense several years' instruction in politeness into a few minutes' cramming. Teach the children to be courteous in the home, both to parents and to one another. Let the table be a place not merely for eating, but also for social enjoyment. Train the children to eat daintily, to be thoughtful in passing the food which is near them, and to take part in the conversation, not monopolizing or interrupting it, but modestly and politely. Teach them to say, "Please," "Thank you," "Excuse me." In short, strive to make your "home manners" "company manners," so that when guests are to be present there will be no anxious "coaching," but the children, and the whole family in fact, will be self-possessed, perfectly at ease, and able to entertain hospitably.

A good deal can be accomplished if parents are careful to be courteous to their children. A mother once having occasion to reach across her little daughter said, "Excuse me, dear." A guest who was present smiled quizzically, and asked, "Are you always as particular as that?"

"Certainly," replied the mother, "I want Ruth to be polite to me and so I must be polite to her." There is everything in the force of a good example.

The power and influence of a Christian home cannot be overestimated, and that home where thoughtful, loving courtesy prevails is the one to which the children will look back after they have left it, and to which they will joyfully return—for after all, what is nearer heaven than a true home?—N. Y. Observer.

A Mother's Reading.

By Lucia Ames Mead.

What must a mother's purpose be? Of course, to make herself the most inspiring, wise, helpful wife, mother and citizen that she can be. Her reading, therefore, must all tend directly or indirectly toward that end. She may read on a dozen subjects in one forenoon but her reading will not be desultory if she selects it according to that purpose. The five minutes with St. John or St. Paul before the day begins may help to give the poise and uplift that will carry her through the fracas in the nursery and the news that coal has risen and the cake is burned. The ten minutes over the cook book and as many more over an article in the health journal may contribute directly to her family's welfare. The "Southern Workman" or the Charities Review which the mail brings may claim a little time if she tries to cull from them just the story that she wants to tell the children or the facts that can be utilized in some way. Is the death rate increasing or diminishing? Have the proposed baths been built? Can we get a tenement house commission in our city? What has such a committee accomplished in New York? Fifteen minutes may suffice to get an answer to these questions and the one hundred and fifty pages of matter irrelevant to this woman's particular purposes may be laid aside unread. It may be of importance for another woman to search for certain other matters in this report, but each who reads with a purpose reads few things completely from cover to cover, except when reading the great masters. Especially is this true of magazines. The florist's wife will read the article on rhododendrons, and omit those on Karnak and the French chateaux which an architect's wife reads first. Mrs. Judson, whose brother is a missionary, reads the article on Mohammedanism, and Mrs. Anthony, who is a woman suffragist, reads "Suffrage in Australia." Out of a dozen magazines, each with a dozen articles, the good reader selects only those few that meet her needs, that will nourish her, and resolutely shuts her eyes to the others which, however alluring, would dissipate her time to do better things.—The Pilgrim.

The Green Witch.

CHAPTER XIV.

"Marget!" cried George, hurrying toward her, "what is the matter?"

The girl uttered a sharp cry and leaped from the tree trunk into a bank of leaves which seemed to shiver in sympathy with her alarm. "Is it you, George?" she asked after a moment. "Oh, why did you come? Why are you here?"

The charm of her singing no longer bound him, and his suspicions returned. In the light of them he distrusted her slightest word. "Why are you surprised?" he returned. "I came at this time last week; isn't it natural for me to return at the same time? Surely you must have looked for me, Marget."

"Looked for you? No!" she cried angrily. "I came here to be all alone. I came that no one might hear me singing. It is my only pleasure in life. You are always spoiling it. I heard you had gone away to Florida, that you left on this evening's train. I would not have come—no, I would never have come, if I had thought you could be here. Why are you always terrifying me? Can't I have my poor lonesome waterfall to myself? Hear how it sobs on the stone ledge! No one loves it but me. Go away and leave us together."

"Do not be angry, Marget," he said, convinced of her sincerity. "There is a wreck on the road, and we are delayed at the switch four hours. So I came."

Her voice grew musical and low. "Then you left your train," she said, eagerly, "and you came here, because you—thought—"

"I came to write that name in the book," he said as she stopped. "But, yes, I hoped to see you, too, for I have something to tell you,—or, to ask."

"Then I am glad I came to-night," she said. "Yet I am afraid for you to be here. There is much trouble in these woods. I hope no harm will come to you, George. You ought to go away, for there might be danger. Yet I am glad you thought of me—I mean that there is something you can ask Marget."

"What danger can there be?" he inquired.

"I am always afraid," said Marget, "except when I am alone. Perhaps there is no danger. Have you already written Spot Stoner's name in the book?"

"Yes," said George, rudely. "Oh, Marget! How can you speak his name? What is the terrible power you have cast upon him?"

"I can speak anybody's name," said Margaret, her voice trembling with passion, "because I have done no wrong to anybody. There is no secret between me and any man. I have no power over others. As for Spot Stoner, I have never spoken to him in my life, nor he to me. I have but one friend in the world—my brother. And there is only one other person living to whom I would be a friend, but he will not let me."

"If you don't know Spot," said George, bewildered by the intensity of her voice, "why did you write his name in your blood last Monday, a week ago?"

"Because you had lost your pencil, and your long walk would have been in vain. Spot Stoner is a stranger to me; but twice you had shown me kindness, and there is very little of that in my life."

"Tell me," said George, "why Spot's name must be written in the book twice each week."

"I do not know. You are the first to tell me it is so. I know nothing of the blank book, or of the lantern. Perhaps—I suspect—I am not sure. Is this what you came to ask me? Then please go back to your train and leave me for the last time. We cannot meet again."

"No, I didn't come to ask this," said George. "It is something else. But I have been all wrong, and since what you tell me, I have no right to ask you anything. I am more sorry than I can tell for the untrue thoughts I have had of you. Yes, I will go now. But forgive me, if you can, Marget. I believe you are good and—a true girl."

"I can forgive you," she said, eagerly, "I can forgive you anything. If you should strike me, I would forgive you when my anger had passed away: I can't help it blazing up, but it soon is gone. When I think of the many winter nights that I stood outside your window, listening to your mother's voice as you played her accompaniments, I know that you and she belong to the sacred part of my soul—the great home of my soul where the voices call. Do you ever hear them?"

"The waterfall?" asked George doubtfully. "It does sound a little like voices."

"You don't hear," said Marget. "No one hears them but Marget. So I say, if you should strike me in the face, I would forgive you."

"I could never strike you, poor Marget," said George, finding his throat dry and aching.

"Couldn't you? But I would rather have you strike me to the earth than treat me well, while thinking me full of evil. Have faith in me, and I can endure any cruelty."

"I have faith in you, Marget. Every word rings true as your voice proves it."

"Then surely you are my friend," cried Marget in exultant tones, as if she had won some great prize. The tears came to George's eyes. "It doesn't matter whether you hate me or like me," she added gently; "if you have faith in me, you are my friend. I will have no other kind. But oh, for faith-friends, I am ready to shed my blood!"

"I am your faith-friend," said George earnestly.

"What did you come here to ask, George?"

"Since I was so mistaken in my suspicions, Marget, I have no right to ask it."

"Yes, you have. My friend has the right to ask anything. If I cannot answer, you will know I would if I could."

"Marget, I have heard that your father is about to disown you, and that you will be sent adrift without home or money. But if you work, he will still share his home with you. I have heard that you refuse to do anything. Can you blame him for expecting you to do your part?"

"You say he will share with me his home!" burst forth Marget passionately. "Do you mean that wretched, dirty, ill-smelling tent; that disgrace to Burr City? He has no home to share with me—only a tent where a great, stupid woman who knows nothing except how to be mean and quarrelsome—and noisy, distracting children, take up the room."

"Are they not your brothers and sisters?" said George, mildly.

"No—they are his children. Perhaps you think Tuck Hootin my father? I mean my real father. Everyone lectures me and scolds me as if he were. My mother was a widow with two children, and he a widower with four, when they married. Poor, wretched mother! Did she think she was doing well by me and brother when she married him? No doubt she did think so, for he had a good house and farm, and she was poor. Anyhow I can't blame her, for she is my mother—she lived not quite a year after that miserable marriage. And yet everyone thinks I should slave for him, though many know the whole story, and those who do not know might wait to inquire before blaming me."

"Certainly," said George, stiffly, "it is none of my affair, and you are quite right to remind me of it."

"Everybody—everybody blames me," cried Marget, angrily, "even my uncle, my mother's own brother! He is so different from mother. He ran away when a boy, and grew up uneducated and rough in his ways, and he is so afraid I will want to live with him that he takes the part of pa against his sister's child. But who does not take his part against me?"

"Good-by, Marget," said George, coldly.

Instantly her manner changed and she started toward him with both hands outstretched. "Not 'good-by' in that voice, George. Think that we are never to meet again—never! And though that can mean little to you it means the loss of half my world; for my friends are my world, and I have but two."

"I am sorry I spoke so," cried George, taking her hands. "It always makes me angry to see another angry."

"How could I treat you so!" she cried, withdrawing her hands as soon as he had taken them. "What can I do to make you know how sorry I am?"

"Your voice tells me," said George, gently. He liked her at that moment more than ever before. It was the swift retreat of the little hands which had been so impulsively offered that raised her high in his esteem.

"My voice shall sing for you before you go," said Marget, "because you like to hear me sing. You and the waterfall shall be my audience. An audience is never too small when it contains a friend. But first I will tell you a little about my life. Then you will understand why I don't work. It isn't because I am ashamed of work, though my mother was a lady. I feel that work cannot make me less a lady. It isn't that I'm lazy—it is because there is no use. There is no use, George, for me to earn money. Where is pa's beautiful farm and large house? There was a heavy mortgage on the place when he married mother. It went to buy his whisky. Where are the fine clothes, the nice furniture, the silver—everything? He drank them up. Why did he, an educated man, a good farmer, a good business man, fall to the position of driving a delivery wagon? Drink—that explains everything in his life since I have known him. He bought a cottage in Burr City—drink changed it to a wretched tent. Think of this third wife; he was not himself when he married that great nagging wretch. He used to get drunk only once in a while, about four times a year; then he would stay drunk till he spent all he could get, while my brother drove the wagon. My brother kept him from losing his position, till Mr. Stoner hired you. Then my brother left. He had done all he could here. Nobody can help pa, for he would sell himself to buy drink.

"His oldest child hires out, and each week when she brings home her wages he takes it to town and debauches himself at the saloon. Once I went to work—I became a hired servant; and I was willing. What a fool I was! He took every cent I made. Then I quit; and I have done nothing since. I will not move my hand to earn a penny to help keep him drunk. Now I am dressed in beautiful, sweet, green leaves, so cool and innocent and clean—I love green! But under this cloak of leaves are my miserable rags. You have seen how I live. It is because there is no use of anything. There has been nothing for me—nothing but to escape and sing all alone. But I have heard the voices calling me to a better life. If I could follow! Do you know a way?"

"What do you mean by a better life?"

"Light—song—laughter—a home—friends—anything different from that tent where I suffocate. I like pretty things—bright colors—happiness."

"Marget, I can only tell you what has done me good. You know father and I have lost all our property and I drive the delivery wagon for our support. My being obliged to work in that way has lost me all my friends. At first I was very unhappy over losing them. But I began to see that if ever I reach a high place in the world I must make my own ladder. And I must not blame the friends who now shun me. The eyes of friends are only human after all; they can't see in the dark."

"Yes, but we are so different! I am just Tuck Hootin's daughter. You know, though I am pretty well educated for my age, there is nothing for me in Burr City but miserable poverty. If I work, pa will drink my wages. If I make myself neat and do the best I can with my poor clothes, I must come home to that tent, perhaps to be beaten or chased into the woods by a drunken man. You see how different it is with us. A man can go to hunt happiness, but a woman must wait for it to come to her. And though I am only a girl in years I am a woman in sorrows. Oh, George, what will become of me?"

"Can't your brother—"

"Yes," she said, quickly, "my hope is in him. If he finds a position that will support us both he will write for me. Poor pa! I have loved him deeply; he used to be kind and sweet, and he was mother's husband. But it seems as if his drinking has hardened and coarsened him till all that was good in his heart is turned to stone. Through everything brother has been true to me. He was willing to give up all he could make, he was willing to throw up whatever job he had at the times pa was drunk to drive the wagon and keep pa his place! Yes, I know he will send for me, when he can."

"And your name is not—er—Hootin," said George, suddenly.

"No; I am Marget Barnard; but people call me Marget Hootin. I am afraid for you to stay here, George."

"Oh, there is plenty of time," said George. "And I don't like to leave you here in the dark. I am afraid for you. Marget, it is wrong to come so far from home. You must guard yourself as a precious jewel. Every girl owes that to herself and to the world."

"What!" said Marget, bitterly, "is Marget worth guarding? It is not a precious jewel you have found, but a piece of broken glass which sparkles because you happen to see it in a certain light. But I am wicked to speak that way to you who are so good and kind to me. You said you meant to reach a high place in life. Tell me a little about the voices you hear. Do they sing for you, after all?"

"Is that what you mean by your voices? Yes, they sing. They tell me I must rise above my position, and so I shall. I mean to be a physician—one of great influence, one who does great good. I must have the money first, then go to college. If I could only find a position in a good doctor's office! I should be willing to scrub the floors and wait on the patients and clean the windows—anything. But it's no use thinking of that. If there's nothing better, I'll drive the delivery wagon. I must support father as well as myself—that makes it slower, you know; but it'll be all the better after I've succeeded."

"Are you sure, sure?" asked Marget, wistfully. "Sometimes the voices sing that when I have gained all that now I long for I shall not care for any of it. I am sure you will succeed, and I hope it will come before your heart is broken. Let us say good-by. I tremble at every sound. I fear for you."

"You promised to sing for me," said George. "Just one song, and I will go. You said we would never meet again, but I'm sure we shall; so don't make a sad song like the others. You are too sad, Marget. You are too much alone, and think too much of the dark side of life. There is such a bright side for you to think of. Are you one of God's children?"

"No," said Marget.

"Would you not like to be?"

"George, I don't know much about God. When I hear his name it gives me a strange feeling, like a little chill. I am afraid of him."

"Oh, Marget! I am sure your mother loved him."

"Did she?" said Marget, doubtfully. "I never heard her talk much about him. Maybe it was because pa was so religious. He talked it so much nobody else had a chance."

"Is Mr. Hootin religious?" exclaimed George.

"Oh, yes! Even when he is drunk he can argue against the Mormons. Pa is a debater. His religion is debating. If his sins were all Mormons he could get the better of them. It would make him a sober man. If there was anything in religion to change a man's life, I should love it."

"But there is, Marget. Debating isn't religion."

"What is religion, then?" she demanded, skeptically.

"It is being good," said George.

"Like a tree?" asked Marget. "You mean just grow straight?"

"A straight tree is good because it is all a tree can be," he answered. "But a person must do more than grow straight. He must help the broken, the crooked and the fallen. No one has done the most he can for himself till he has done all he can for others. Marget, won't you read the Bible? Won't you go to church and learn?"

"I would rather learn by watching some life," said Marget, wilfully. "Where is there a Christian life for me to copy? Where is there a life that gives all it can to others? That is something I have never found."

"Have you hunted for it?"

"Anyway, I haven't found it. Now I will sing for you, because you must not stay longer."

"Yes, sing. But remember, we are told to copy Jesus' life, and not those of his followers. If you can't find a good life to copy, live one yourself for other people to imitate."

"George," said Marget, impulsively, "you are good—good! I will try." There was a pause, and then she began to sing strange words to the tune of "Annie Laurie." As her voice floated out clear and charged with feeling, George caught his breath, while the exquisite modulations gave him that supreme delight which brings tears to the eyes.

"In my heart a thought is blooming

Like a flower of early spring;

And its perfumes sweet and tender,

The tears to my sad eyes bring.

For no one can see its beauty,

And no one enjoy its bloom,

And the heart that gives it glory—

That heart must be its tomb.

"For this thought is just for me.

And the world will never see;

And the hope that gives it perfume

Can never, never be."

The voice died away so softly and prolonged that for a time it seemed as if the waterfall had caught her tones and was holding them.

Business Notes.

Our song book orders have been splendid, for we have the books of the "singing brotherhood."

All ordering "Tidings of Salvation" at $1 per dozen, prepaid, are well pleased, and well they may be, at the price, considering the book.

Life of Judge J. S. Black sold out, and only a few of Life of L. L. Pinkerton remain, and when gone you are left; 35 cents while they last.

We are not a "tract distributing people," but should be, and will gladly send our tract circular to all inquirers. In meetings they are not surpassed.

No more McGarvey on Mark, and it is useless to order them, but call for Matthew and Mark (McGarvey), or Luke, Lamar, slightly damaged, at 50 cents.

The "Wedding Booklets" and "Wedding Blossoms" at 50 cents each are two of the happiest ideas in wedding certificates we have ever put out, and are giving unbounded satisfaction.

We are still booking orders for the Revised New Testament in limp cloth at 7 cents, in full cloth at 15 cents, and in primer type at 35 cents, postpaid, and these will soon be exhausted.

By the way, in going over stock, we found a few copies of Matthew and Mark, by McGarvey, and of Luke by Lamar, slightly damaged, and will let these go while they last at 50 cents per copy.

We have sold the last of "Johnson on John" at the 50 cent rate, but will be glad to fill all future orders at the regular rate for John, or Luke or Matthew and Mark at $1.50 each, while Hebrews and Romans may go at the same price.

The Normal Instructor, by Dowling, is now in seven numbers, and all are giving good satisfaction to the teaching force of the country, as all of Dowling's work does, and we are sending them out at 15 cents each, or $1.50 per dozen, postpaid.

All our friends are surprised at the "bargains" proffered in the book offers, many of which will surely be withdrawn at the end of the 30 days, having now only one week more to

GREAT THINGS are not necessary for the attainment of great character. This is strikingly manifest in the pattern life—the life of our Lord. For thirty years that life was entirely uneventful, unhistorical. He lived in a village, mixed with peasants, wrought at the bench, dwelt in a cottage. There was no great trial, like the temptation in the wilderness; no moving triumph, like the palm-strewing; no ecstasy, like the transfiguration; no humiliation, like the crown of thorns; no grief, like Gethsemane. Without dazzling episodes, striking situations, or tragic sorrows, without the dramatic, the uncommon, or the miraculous, He grew into the fullness of that supreme character which commands the admiration and reverence of mankind. It is most encouraging to the obscure million to know that the noblest life attained its last completeness in the tamest scenes, unprompted, undisciplined by anything extraordinary. Use spiritually and faithfully a life of apparent trifles, and it shall furnish all you need.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

No. 26

Current Events

The Republican national convention in Chicago last week did everything that was expected of it and nothing that was not expected. It unanimously nominated Roosevelt for president and Fairbanks for vice-president, the former on the first ballot and the latter by acclamation, and it adopted a platform containing no departures from the most orthodox standards of Republican orthodoxy. For the most part the convention was quiet and colorless. There was too much unanimity of opinion, at least on the surface. When the time for nominations arrived, however, there was no lack of noisy demonstrations. When ex-Governor Black, of New York, concluded his nominating speech by mentioning the name of Theodore Roosevelt, the convention "rose as one man" and the bedlam, which signified that the statesmen composing the convention approved of the policies and personality of the nominee, continued for twenty-seven minutes by the watch. The contrast between this wild outburst and the apathy which prevailed during the other sessions could not fail to suggest to the cynically inclined that possibly this spontaneous burst of enthusiasm was carefully prepared and touched off at the proper time like any other firework.

The Republican platform was drafted by Senator Lodge, who successfully resisted the efforts of certain members of the resolution committee to incorporate in it some concessions to what they conceived to be a popular feeling against a too rigid insistence on protection. The platform, as introduced and adopted, claims for the party large credit for the prosperity of recent years, and proposes a continuance without mitigation of the policies which have marked that period. The principle of protection is exalted as an absolute essential of our national well-being. There is a vague hint that some time it may be necessary to alter existing schedules with changing commercial conditions, and a nebulous allusion to reciprocity as something which may not be objectionable if kept within such bounds as not to conflict with the principle and practice of protection. But there is nothing that even approaches a categorical statement as to what degree of reciprocity is consistent with protection, nor is there any definite promise to make a serious effort to find out. Much less is there any assertion that commercial conditions have already changed so as to demand a revision of the Dingley schedule, though very many good Republicans believe that to be the fact. Legislation for the encouragement of the merchant marine is recommended in terms which look much like the ship subsidy program which met a merited fate two years ago. There are no new promises touching Philippine independence, either immediate or ultimate, and no new contributions to the currency question. In short, it is a thorough embodiment of the late Senator Hanna's advice—"stand pat."

There are various opinions regarding the real attitude of the Republican machine at heart toward Mr. Roosevelt. At the outset of his administration he was so far out of touch with the machine, both by temperament and by habit, that it looked forward with apprehension to his course of action. And now, after three years, we see a Republican convention shouting itself black in the face for twenty-seven minutes at a stretch when he is renominated. Evidently something has happened. Either the President has surrendered to the machine or he has won it, or he has won from it. The first possibility is not supported by an adequate array of facts. Mr. Roosevelt is not a machine man. He could not be if he tried. His method of making appointments and of handling patronage is the very antithesis of what the machine considers proper and desirable. On the other hand, there is no evidence that the machine has gone out of business, or that it has gone over to the President's way of thinking and acting. A conversion of this sort is not to be expected, for conversion would mean suicide. The truth of the matter more probably is that the President has made his position so strong that the machine dare not oppose him. There is plenty of evidence that the professional politicians in the Republican ranks would much rather have had a nominee who is more amenable to the influence of the party organization. It is a token both of Mr. Roosevelt's personal popularity and of his political acumen that he was able to command the unanimous support of the party leaders in the convention in spite of their lack of enthusiasm over his methods.

Mr. Fairbanks is a man of entirely different stamp. He is, to a far greater extent than Mr. Roosevelt, an adherent of the party organization and a part of it. But for the assassination of President McKinley, he would have been the logical candidate for the presidential nomination this year.

The terrible tragedy, whose death-roll is already known to be about 800 people, with many more unaccounted for, while scores of wounded and shattered people are in the hospitals, is being investigated along three lines —by the United States government, by District Attorney Jerome, of New York, and by a coroner's inquest. The terrible theater fire at Chicago, which only a few months ago appalled the whole country, has but preceded a more awful catastrophe. In some respects the two disasters were parallel. In both cases the people destroyed were holiday crowds bent on pleasure. At Chicago they were trapped like rats in a building with closed doors. In the eastern tragedy a great excursion steamer, the General Slocum, was crowded with fifteen hundred passengers, mostly women and children, attendants at St. Mark's Lutheran church, out on a Sunday-school picnic. No words can describe the horrors of that fiery holocaust or the drowning in ravenous Hell Gate of those driven from the boat by the flames. Whether the boat was complying with the regulations as to structure and equipment is a point which the investigators will have to discover. Graft is nearly everywhere, it seems, in our public and in much of our business life. The evasion of the laws will continue until the man in the street decides that the law is useless unless it is carried into effect, and that it is his business to do his part in making it effective.

Presumably there are very many ministers who forget those things which are behind and reach forth unto those which are before. When the call comes to a better pulpit, these generally discover that the call is a "divine" one, and accordingly accept its leading. So strongly has this view come to possess the public mind that Dr. George M. Stone, a Baptist minister of Hartford, Conn., has been endeavoring to be what he calls "an unconventional minister." He has just preached his twenty-fifth anniversary sermon of the present pastorate, from which other churches have in vain sought to take him. He remains in Hartford because of the vigilant and unceasing kindness of the people. The people want him and he wants to stay. That is an ideal state for pastor and people to be in. Judging by the very feeble response we had to our request for the names of preachers among us who have held long pastorates, there must be quite a number of Christian churches and preachers who fall short of this ideal condition.

St. Louis will entertain many distinguished men this year. This week A Cardinal's Visit. Cardinal Satolli has come. If, as some aver, he has come purely for his own pleasure no one will object to his having a good time, and to such reasonable courtesies as the Exposition authorities may wish to extend to him. But his visit, if it have no such specific object as "a mission" to effect, if possible, diplomatic relations with the United States and the Vatican, will be used in the interests of Catholicism. Despite the fact that the more progressive Catholics realize the futility of any attempt to unite church and state in America and the recognition of the temporal power of the pope, there is a strong party determined on trying to effect this. They will use all the glory they can get from the Cardinal's visit to impress their fellow citizens with the greatness of the Catholic church.

You may run up and down the gamut of pronunciation and variation, "Americans" but the world over, as a people and as individuals of this country, we are popularly denominated "Americans." The native of Canada or Mexico has to be content with a more constricted recognition. And now authority is to give its seal to usage. Secretary Hay has instructed all diplomatic and consular officers of the United States to substitute the word America for the United States in the future. It is a time-saving decision which the Canadian, who is really concerned, has taken as a matter of course. Some day, in the not far distant future, he will think it a good enough name to replace his own.

The prohibition national convention is to be held in Indianapolis during the present week. One General Miles for President. circumstance which gives that event a wider interest than usual is the fact that General Nelson A. Miles will probably be nominated for the presidency. The most important prohibition organs have declared outspokenly in his favor, and he has said nothing to indicate that he would not accept the nomination if it were offered to him. There is no other candidate in sight who would be likely to command so strong a support as General Miles, and if he wants the nomination he can probably have it. During the anticanteen agitation General Miles came out strongly on the right side of the question, but it is a matter of recent discovery to most people, even in the party, that he is a prohibitionist. He is quoted as saying that for forty years he has been in favor of national prohibition of the liquor traffic. His nomination would have the value of giving the party an advantage which it has not possessed in any previous campaign, in having a presidential candidate who would not need an introduction to the American public. The purpose, at present, seems to be to add to the prohibition plank a few other principles believed to be important, such as the Initiative and Referendum, citizenship following the flag, etc. It remains to be seen whether these planks can be added without dividing prohibitionists.

The assassination of General Bobrikoff, governor-general of Finland, Finland's Fate. week before last, seems likely to mark a final crisis in the affairs of that unhappy country. For many years General Bobrikoff had been the willing instrument of Russian tyranny in Finland and the faithful executor of whatever projects were devised for destroying Finnish liberties and violating the Finnish constitution which the Czar is under oath to protect. To begin with, his very person was a violation of the written and sworn agreement that the governor-general of Finland must be a Finlander. There was no more heartily hated man in Europe than he. The theory of the Russian government is that his assassination was part of a deep-laid and widespread plot against the government, and it is to be punished accordingly by a complete abrogation of the Finnish constitution and by the destruction of the few remnants of free government which remained.

Three hundred millions! That is the number of copies, in whole or portions, of the scriptures A Good Work. that have gone into circulation during the past century. While the Bible may not be as much read in the homes as we would desire, there are indications that are encouraging. The American Sunday-school union, for instance, has been in existence 83 years, and its last annual report tells us that in 1903 it established 2,542 new Bible-schools, out of which 133 churches have been organized, and its missionaries visit over 1,200 schools. In the mountains of Kentucky and Tennessee men and women walk miles to take part in the services that have been opened up. This is a very promising field of the union's work, which included the distribution among poor families throughout its territory of over 21,000 copies of the Bible.

The South African war was the cause of great cleavage in Christian ranks. Not only did it divide Boer and Briton, The Gospel After the War. but it divided Boer from Boer and Briton from Briton. Dr. John Clifford told us that it tested his friendships as they had never been tested before. Many an Englishman who had high opinions of this non-conformist popular leader was ready to execrate him for his strong denunciations of the South African folly. It is pleasant to find that the gospel is now an agent for the healing of animosities. It is reported that revival services in South Africa, by "Gypsy Smith," a well known English evangelist, have done more to bring the divided Christians of Cape Colony together than anything else that has been done. The Dutch and English ministers are fraternizing again. That is quick work and sets an example for Americans. We still have churches divided by a war forty years dead.

It is not surprising that the people of Missouri are just a little bit non-plused. At one end of the state a hard blow has been hit at Mr. Missouri's Surprise. Folk's work of reform in the victory of the machine in the Democratic primaries in Buchanan county. Sam Cook, who is by no means friendly to Mr. Folk, carried the city of St. Joseph by 2,072 to 1,654. On the top of this comes a great victory for Mr. Folk in the pleading guilty to the charge of boodling by Edmund Bersch. This happened on Monday and was the most sensational event in the St. Louis boodle investigation since the return of Murrell from Mexico. Kelly and Gutke, two other indicted boodlers, will, it is said, throw themselves on the mercy of the court, and it is thought that Kelly, who "knows things" and was spirited away to Europe to prevent revelations, will now do some talking. All of these men are charged with bribery in the St. Louis city lighting deal. Apparently all the defendants were ready for trial, and Mr. Folk was on hand to prosecute, but they abandoned their intention at the last moment, owing, it is thought, to the affirmation of the penitentiary sentences of Lehman and Hartmann. Missouri thus furnishes the curious spectacle of several little fish being caught and cooked, while the great big fish, though put in the pot at Columbia, flopped out at Fulton. The bribe takers are getting into the penitentiary at last, but Ed Butler, a briber, has escaped, to act the part of bondsman for the men on trial.

A Definite Creed.

During a very pleasant interview in our office a few days since with Dr. Prestridge, editor of the Baptist Argus, he called our attention to an editorial which recently appeared in his paper under the heading "The Original Baptist Creed: It is Authoritative and Binding." This article had received editorial comment in the Christian Standard. Some of the statements in Dr. Dawes' article, which, as we understand, is endorsed by the editor of the Argus, were as follows. In describing "what is the creed that we need," he says:

1. One that is Christ-made, not man-made.
2. One that is binding. Only the Christian-made creed can be binding.
3. One that expresses what one must believe to become and remain a member of a Baptist church. Anything more would be an infringement of the conscience.

There was a faith delivered to the saints, and it was final. They were to keep on doing that even unto the end of the world.

This, it seems to me, was the system of doctrine proclaimed by the Baptists of the first century.

1. They were to preach Christ and thus make believers.
2. They were to baptize these believers.
3. They were to teach all Christ's commands to these believers.

A study of the Bible having in view the practice of the Baptist churches in apostolic times, as to what was required for admission to membership, would show about the following:

1. Personal faith in Jesus.
2. Baptism.
3. Obedience to Christ.

The questions asked the candidates seeking membership in Baptist churches to day are something like these:

1. Are you trusting to Jesus Christ for salvation?
2. Do you wish to follow him in baptism and unite with his church?
3. Are you ready to do what is the clearly revealed will of Christ?

In substance the requirements are the same for this time and the apostolic times, as to what was required for admission to membership.

Substituting the word "Christian" for the word "Baptist," in the above quotation, there is little, if anything, in the statement that any of our readers would object to. It only reveals what we have often stated, that two religious bodies holding, in common, so much that is vital and fundamental as Baptists and Disciples of Christ, ought to cultivate a better understanding of each other's position with a view to a closer co-operation in common work. The terms of admission are so identical in meaning and essence that there seems to be no good reason why they should not co-operate in missionary and other forms of co-operative work when such union of effort would better promote the glory of God and the salvation of men.

A curious feature of the article of Dr. Dawes, however, is a statement which he gives as a reason why Baptists should substitute this original creed of the New Testament for the modern creeds which have been issued. He says: "It would avoid the looseness of the Disciple brethren who claim to take the Bible, and yet point to nothing definite." We call this statement curious because there is nothing so distinctive in the position of the Disciples of Christ as their plea for, and insistence on, the restoration of the New Testament creed, confessed of old by Simon Peter and accepted by Jesus as the foundation of his church. Whatever else we may hold as distinctive has grown out of this supreme contention—that Christ, and Christ alone, is the object of saving faith, and that to believe on him and obey him is Christianity. Is it possible that we have so obscured this cardinal feature of the reformation by our small contentions that this good brother has not understood that we hold it and teach it? Or was he shrewdly aiming to guard against the criticism of some of his brethren that this was "rank Campbellism," and in order to make his appeal more acceptable, presented it as something different from and superior to our position? We do not know and do not judge as to that, but we do rejoice and will rejoice if this proposition to substitute the original creed of Christianity for modern creeds shall meet with general acceptance among our Baptist brethren. This would immensely narrow the chasm between us and hasten the time when these two great religious bodies may stand together, heart to heart, pleading for "one Lord, one faith and one baptism."

We all agree that only those who have faith in the one Lord the faith that manifests itself in genuine repentance, or a change of heart and a desire to obey him on whom they believe, are entitled to baptism, and through baptism to the fellowship and blessings of the church. There is still a lingering doubt with some Baptists as to whether Disciples do not hold to the magical efficacy of baptism to effect a moral change! No representative teacher or preacher among us, however, holds to any such crude view. Baptism is the outward expression of the inward faith and life, and therefore is, on its human side, a pledge of loyalty to Christ, while on its divine side it is a pledge of forgiveness and acceptance with God. This change of heart and purpose is wrought through faith in Christ, and finds its formal expression in the symbolic act of baptism, which has no meaning or value apart from its antecedents, and the fact that it is an open and overt surrender to Christ and a pledge of allegiance to him.

The plain truth is, that Baptists have allowed themselves to depreciate baptism, as a divine institution, holding an important and honored place in New Testament evangelism, reacting perhaps from the theory of baptismal regeneration as taught by Roman Catholics and some Protestant Pedobaptist creeds. On the other hand in seeking to restore baptism to its original place, some Disciples have allowed themselves to be carried into legalistic views which border dangerously near on sacramentarianism. But the pendulum of thought among us is now swinging back to the center where we hope our Baptist brethren will meet us.

The Carrollton Convention.

The Missouri Christian convention held in Carrollton last week was the first held under the new arrangement, involving a change of the missionary convention from October to June, and the combination of all our interests in one convention. Considering the fact that we were in competition this year with the World's Fair and with the national convention to be held in the state, and with the additional disadvantage of a rainy season, we should pronounce it a decided success. It was not so large as some of our conventions have been, there being only about four hundred delegates present, but it made up in quality what it lacked in size, and will stand as one of the most successful conventions in the history of our work in the state. We have only space here to mention a few of the prominent features of the convention.

C. W. B. M.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions occupied the field first, beginning with an address on Friday evening by the president, Mrs. M. M. Goode, of St. Joseph, and another by the national president of the C. W. B. M., Mrs. N. E. Atkinson. These two addresses set a good keynote for the women's work. It was a special inspiration to have Mrs. Atkinson present, and her wise and clear utterances in relation to woman's work were heard with deepest interest. The problem before our Christian women of Missouri, as elsewhere, is how to enlist a very much larger number of the Christian women of the state in the work which has proved so great a blessing to those who have been enlisted. The preachers of the state should lend their help and hearty co-operation in the solution of this problem. It means much for our Christian sisterhood in the state, as well as much for the cause of missions. The work in the state under the leadership of Mrs. L. G. Bantz, the corresponding secretary, showed encouraging features, and a healthy tone pervading the auxiliaries of the state. It was an interesting and touching moment in the convention when Mrs. Alderman, who lost her husband in Mexico during the past year, and who stood at her post at Monterey, was presented to the convention with her two little girls, and talked tenderly and beautifully of her work in that city. The different departments of the work were well presented by those in charge of same. This was the twenty-fifth anniversary of the work of the C. W. B. M. in Missouri, and the occasion was celebrated by an appropriate poem by Mrs. Phoebe R. Gibson, from St. Louis, and by a souvenir program prepared by Sister Bantz. The women are satisfied with the change of time and with the union of forces.

Christian Endeavor.

Christian Endeavor made a good showing under the superintendency of H. A. Denton. His report made on Saturday evening showed an increase in societies and membership. There was a stirring address on Saturday evening by Bro. F. M. Tinder, of Lancaster, Ky., upon "The Outlook of Christian Endeavor in the First Decade of the Twentieth Century." The Christian Endeavor part of the program continued during the most of the forenoon session of Monday, there being addresses on different phases of the work by several speakers, including J. A. Lord of the Christian Standard; R. F. Lozier, of Carrollton, and A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico.

Lord's Day Services.

As usual the Lord's day included in one of our conventions, was a very busy day, full of religious activity. Our ministers filled all the Protestant pulpits of Carrollton, both forenoon and evening. The Editor of this paper spoke to a large audience in the forenoon at the Christian church. Interest centered in the communion service at three o'clock in the afternoon. At that hour the large auditorium was packed with people, and our honored veteran, T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, gave one of his warmest and most tender sermons in the preparation of our hearts for the communion service. M. M. Goode and J. H. Garrison presided at the table, while the spirit of God seemed to preside over and pervade all hearts. Many felt, as at our national conventions, that this service alone was worth the trouble of attending the convention. This service was followed by the five o'clock hour of prayer by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, to which a large company remained. This was presided over by Sister J. K. Rogers. It was indeed an impressive and tender hour of prayer. Sister Rogers, Sister Atkinson and many of the other sisters spoke and several offered prayer. The sermon in the evening was also under the auspices of the Endeavor convention, and was by R. G. Frank, of Liberty, on "God's Estimate of the Human Soul." It was Brother Frank's first appearance in one of our state conventions, and he made a splendid impression.

Bible-school Convention.

We do not think we have ever known a more profitable session in Sunday-school work in any of the conventions held especially in the interest of Sunday-schools. The report of the board by H. F. Davis, the corresponding secretary for many years, made a fine showing. In closing his report he laid down the work which has made such splendid growth under his leadership. The convention was loth to accept his resignation, but his decision was final. W. A. Moore, who succeeds him, has been in the field for some time and has demonstrated his fitness for the place. The primary work; How to hold the boys; Superintendent's part; What can the teacher do? A successful Bible-school; Elements and equipment needed, etc., were presented by different speakers in the most forceful and profitable manner. Monday evening was one of the most interesting sessions of the convention. There were two stirring addresses, one by G. D. Edwards on "Why use the American Standard Revised Bible?" and the other by A. N. Lindsay on "Value of Children's Day." Each of these addresses, in its own way—and they were widely different—was a pronounced success. The Sunday-school interest held the field Tuesday morning, in strong addresses by Professor Stagner, of Camden Point; F. M. Rains, of Cincinnati, and J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia.

The Missionary Convention.

The report of the state board, although for nine months instead of a year, on account of change of time, showed an advance over the previous year. Some facts and statistics of this report will be presented elsewhere. The needs of the different sections of the state were ably presented by different brethren in a sort of parliament conducted by G. A. Hoffmann. George Darsie, of Kentucky, made a ringing appeal for church extension; F. M. Rains in his characteristic way laid the cause of foreign missions on the consciences of the delegates. J. H. Hardin, in a short, earnest speech, presented the cause of general home missions, while S. B. Moore, of St. Louis, presented the claims of the Benevolent association in his usual happy way. The Tuesday evening session was occupied with an address on state work by Crayton S. Brooks, of Jefferson City, who did not entirely ignore political conditions in the state and the need of political as well as religious reformation.

Wednesday, we may truly say, was the great day of the convention. Those who left before the sessions of that day missed some of the most important features of the convention. The Bible exposition which was to have been given by Prof. D. R. Dungan, of Christian university, was most acceptably given by Bro. J. M. Philputt, of St. Louis, in the absence of Professor Dungan, whose wife's death prevented his presence with us, and was a source of sorrow to the convention. The address on Christian education by H. G. Hill was a strong and manly appeal for higher ministerial education, and for a better support for our colleges, which won the enthusiastic approval of the convention. It ought to have been heard by the whole brotherhood of the state. The committees on Ways and Means, the State of the Cause and others, presented matters of great importance to the welfare of our cause in the state. The forenoon session was closed with a sermon on "The Proofs of Immortality," by George H. Combs, of Kansas City, which came as a balm and an inspiration to all hearts. At its close the convention stood and sang, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord," with a deeper appreciation of the meaning of the words. The reports of schools and colleges, read by Dean W. J. Lhamon, of the Missouri Bible college, presented a most hopeful outlook for all our schools in the state, as well as actual progress during the year passed. The spirit of unity and co-operation among our schools which breathed throughout this report, signed by the representatives of our various schools, augurs well for the future of our educational interests in Missouri.

The report of the committee on Students' Aid Fund took a new departure but it was a long step in advance, in recommending the incorporation of a Christian education society in the state to secure by donations, bequests, etc., a fund for the aid of students preparing for the ministry and for the management of such fund. This report was adopted and the committee appointed to nominate a board of nine directors to take the legal steps for such incorporation, and to present to our next annual convention rules and regulations for the management of such fund. This we believe to be one of the most important steps taken in any of our conventions for many years. It is a practical way to deal with a very vital problem. The recommendation of the committee appointed for that purpose a year ago to establish a permanent fund for our state mission work, was thoroughly discussed pro and con, and finally adopted with certain changes as to the method of creating such a fund.

These are some of the most important matters which came before our convention Wednesday after a considerable number of the delegates had left for their homes. The closing session of the convention on Wednesday night was addressed by J. N. Crutcher, of Moberly, on "The Transforming Power of the Gospel," in which the speaker pointed out what marvelous changes had been wrought by Christianity, and how the heralds of Christ now as of old were "turning the world upside down." After a prayer of consecration, and a few tender closing words by the aged veteran, J. A. Dearborn, the convention sang "God be With You Till we Meet Again," and received the benediction from our faithful and devoted corresponding secretary, T. A. Abbott, who commended us all to God and to the word of his grace, and turned our faces and our hearts to the work of the coming year. The motto of Missouri Disciples for the coming year is, "Speak to the people, that they go forward."

Editor's Easy Chair.

It was the Glorious Fourth in the year 1861. On one of the rich upland farms in the Ozarks of southwest Missouri, a field of golden wheat waved gently in the summer breeze. Four young men, two yet in their teens, and two having just passed over the line, had subordinated their desire to join in some patriotic demonstration on that day, to a sense of immediate duty, and were in the harvest field to cradle and bind and shock the ripened grain. The music of the sharpened scythe as it passed through the grain was relieved, occasionally, by an outburst of patriotic song. There is something very peaceful and idyllic in the scene of a harvest field, when the song of the reapers mingles with the cry of the falling grain and the ring of the scythe in response to the sharpening whetstone. The sun shone brightly from a cloudless sky, and a gentle breeze from the southwest rustled the ripening wheat. The young men referred to worked on as cheerily as possible, but not without many an anxious thought and dark foreboding of their country's future. An indefinable feeling of dread brooded over the spirits of men everywhere at that time. Suddenly a distant rumbling sound was heard, and the young men paused and listened. Again the stillness was broken by that ominous sound that came on the breeze from the southwest. It took but a few moments to understand the meaning of those deep, reverberating tones which once heard can never be forgotten. It was the booming of cannon, and the war was on—on in Missouri, and the dream of "armed neutrality" was ended. It was the guns of Siegel at Carthage announcing to the people of the southwest that the crisis had come, and that men must take their position for or against the flag of the union.

It was high noon. The shadow of the lone hickory tree which stood in the field had shrunk to its shortest dimension, and the four young men referred to sought its protection from the noonday sun, while dispatching their frugal lunch. One of the young men, finishing his meal, took his stand beneath the tree, called his comrades to order, and announced that the Fourth of July would not be permitted to pass without recognition, and that if they would be his audience he would make them a speech. The continued booming of the distant cannon served as his text. He spoke of the ominous condition of the country and prophesied that the war, whose presence was announced in the roar of the cannon then saluting our ears, was to be one of the greatest in the history of the world. The question as to whether the American Union was to be perpetuated down to coming generations was to be determined by this war. The hour had arrived when men must choose their sides, for the struggle was on. As for himself, his choice was already made. He would follow the flag of Washington, of Jefferson and of Jackson, even if it should lead him to the battlefield and to death. Saturated with the spirit of Patrick Henry, the young orator exclaimed, as he pointed to the southwest, whence came the noise of battle, "Our brethren are already in the field. Why stand we here idle? Every breeze that sweeps from the southwest brings to our ears the clash of resounding arms." Appealing to his comrades to stand with him, and to stand by the Union, he closed with a peroration on the Union and the flag, amid the cheers of his comrades. The celebration over, the work of the harvesters was resumed until the sun sank to his rest in the golden west. And so ended the Fourth of July, 1861.

The night following the eventful day described above, there was a solemn family conclave, under the trees which shadowed a humble home. Young patriotism and parental love were the two forces in conflict. The boy who had pleaded with his comrades in the wheat-field to be true to the flag, now pleaded with aged parents for their consent to join the forces of the Union. On the next day two of the young men might have been seen wending their way, on foot, fifteen miles distant to the metropolis of the southwest, where, with others of their comrades, from that and other parts of the southwest, and with the union army concentrating there, they made preparations for that contest which ended in the bloody struggle at Wilson Creek, and the death of the lamented Lyon. Then came the weary campaigns, the hard marches, the bloody battle fields, the heartaches, the tearful separations, the lonely vigils, the defeats, the triumphs, of that long and arduous struggle, which ended only at Appomattox. Three of the young men who toiled in the harvest-field on that memorable Fourth of the long ago, passed through the ordeal of the war as soldiers, and live, even yet, to celebrate other Fourths, and to rejoice in the Union restored, in causes of alienation removed, and in the bonds of brotherhood between the different sections of our country strengthened and made enduring. But oh, the fearful price that was paid by the sons of the north and the south, equally brave and equally conscientious, to settle forever some of the problems left unsettled by our fathers! We recur to these facts in our national history—"Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Another Fourth of July approaches. No booming of hostile cannon breaks the peace of our beloved union of states. The hearts of our citizens, whether in the north or the south, the east or the west, thrill with patriotic pride and devotion at the sight of our common flag, honored in every state and respected around the world. But there are other battles to fight and other foes to overcome, if we are to hand down to those who come after us the priceless heritage which we enjoy. Political corruption; bribery; indifference to the claims of civic righteousness; neglect of political duties; the danger of concentrated power, whether of wealth or of labor; the greed of monopolies; the disregard of the claims of the poor and the needy, and the cry of justice; the ravages of intemperance, and the disregard of law—these are the foes which should call out our patriotism on the Fourth of July, 1904. True patriotism will not content itself with noisy demonstrations and brilliant illuminations, but will set itself to the task of overcoming these internal enemies that are undermining the very foundations of our civil and religious liberty. Never was patriotism in greater demand than to-day. We have demonstrated our patriotism in war and have risen to noble heights of unselfishness; it remains for us to demonstrate the higher patriotism which manifests itself in antagonizing every evil influence and every corrupt institution that threatens the moral welfare of the nation. If the Fourth of July may serve to develop this newer and higher patriotism, we do well to observe this anniversary of our nation's birth, that we may increase its true glory and promote its perpetuity to the latest generation. In this conflict let us have:

"The union of hearts, the union of hands,
And the flag of our union forever."

Visit From a Finlander.

Among the visitors to our World's Fair pavilion last week was a Finlander. Happening to be in the pavilion at the time of his visit, we were introduced to him and ascertained that he was himself a minister and deeply interested in the subject of Christian union. "Vat iss de confession of faith of dese Disciples of Christ?" was one of his first questions. When this was explained to him, he said, in his broken English, that the church he represented had no creed but that given in the New Testament and no rule of faith but the Bible, and that they were seeking to unite all Christians in their country. He explained that some of their members believed in infant baptism and some did not, and that they allowed each to have his own way in that matter. We explained to him that our object was the same, but our method was somewhat different, and handed him a number of tracts which he seemed eager to secure and to read. After a careful examination of the various exhibits, he came to us, shook hands cordially, with a stately bow, and left the pavilion, promising to make a careful study of our movement.

Is a Constructive Theology Possible?

The Desire for Positive Theology.

Men of education and of thought all about us are asking for what they call a positive and constructive theology. The native hunger of the soul for that absolute truth which Plato says is the true food of the soul finds expression in all kinds of wilful and even weird systems of thought. Wistful is the word for the mood of our day, wistful because somewhere near the heart of all of us, the heart that sins and fears, that loves and yearns, lives the great truth which would give it peace and life, and wistful also because something keeps the mind of our day from seeing and receiving, from using with indomitable conviction, that very truth.

Why Hard to Find?

Why is it so hard, to-day, to find "immutable conviction about absolute truth"?

The answer may no doubt be made as varied as the interests of human life. If it were my duty, to-day, to survey them, I would have to deal with those social and ethical conditions which have been created by the growth of modern democracy and by the enormous increase of wealth among the leading races. These two facts have endless moral and religious ramifications. It is the witness of some of the broadest and keenest and most sympathetic students of our own day that the modern world in large measure owes to its great wealth and to its unparalleled consciousness of power, that weakening of grasp upon the spiritual, that fading of absolute truth from the steady gaze of an ardent faith.

The movement in philosophy has its counterpart in the realm of science. There men once believed in certain objective distinctions which have in a certain sense disappeared. The whole universe is presented to us in the form of a continuous process. We are told to watch the three primal factors of reality within space and time, viz., matter, force and motion.

Herbert Spencer, who is the chief philosophic exponent of this point of view, was partly trained as an engineer in his youth, and the categories of his trade run through his whole system. His thought of a God was what Matthew Arnold would have called "a magnified, unnatural"—engineer.

The Mechanical Process.

It is remarkable how strong and deep is the grasp of this ideal upon the mind of our day. We find it asserted in every direction that the aim of science is deliberately and persistently to reduce everything, every part of the whole process of history, to the terms of mechanics. Nothing is for it explained until the whole fact is expressed in footprints of force. And this ideal can but have permeated for good or ill into every realm of exact thought. One can trace its influence in almost every region of religious thought, and in the most unexpected quarters. It seems to have paralyzed its power to assert clear distinctions, to grasp firmly the thought of changeless truths, to believe in any permanent, indestructible realities except matter. Everything seems to be always becoming something else. Nothing has been said or done by any man which we must not try to connect casually with the sayings and doings of other men before and after him.

Environment Theory.

The inductive method and spirit carries us even a step farther. If its aim, its ultimate and guiding ideal, is to explain every word and every act and every man by his connection with his environment, the tendency of that method, when unchecked by the influence of other ideals and principles, must be and is to obliterate originality from history. There was an old notion that when you had traced a certain deed or word to a man of genius you had got as far as you could. Something in it was peculiarly his own, not to be accounted for except through the indefinable quality of his own mind and his own character. Now, of course, no real history of any period or of any great movement can ever be written except on that hypothesis.

But I believe the tendency, the implicit aim and the popular effect of the historical method as carried out by many of its leaders to-day, is thus to reduce all historical personalities to a dead uniformity. Do we not all find ourselves almost instinctively feeling after some theory by which the environment may explain the individual?

Applied to Christ.

In the study of Christianity the implicit ideal to which I have referred is rigidly applied to the name and person of Christ and to the experiences and illumination of his apostles. Passage after passage could be cited from some well known writers of the nineteenth century on the New Testament period, in which it is explicitly asserted that historical science cannot brook the notion of a superhuman personality; that the historian must be unskilled in the technique of his craft and untrue to its spirit who should admit that in Jesus Christ we have anything more than genius. To secure this end the utmost advantage is taken of those tendencies, even of those weaknesses and limitations of the historical methods to which I have referred. Uncertainty about the exact words he uttered, infelicity or variety of reports of his life and work, the influence of their own experience and their own prejudices upon the memories of his disciples, discovery of sources outside scripture for many of the opinions held by the Jews of his own day, fuller knowledge also of the wide welter of religious thought and practice amid which a man like Paul grew up at Tarsus and moved in his journeys through the Greek-Roman world, these are all employed to reduce the originality of the Christian spirit, to obscure the solitary glory in which the faith of the church has from the beginning set the divine human person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rules Out the Supernatural.

One more feature of modern thought must be very briefly named. It is one which has begun to affect the popular mind profoundly and whose end is not yet. Philosophy and history have combined to create the science of religion. In that study we are concerned with the life of religion far beyond the Christian pale, in the life of the whole race of man. But at present and inevitably it takes the form of the study of the religious consciousness of man. The various kinds of belief and practice are accounted for wholly from the human side by a psychological analysis of the feelings and thoughts of men. The students of this science are by no means deniers of the existence of God, they would even assert that the divine spirit has been present everywhere, and is in some measure manifest in every, even the poorest, form of religion. But again, the first interest being historical or psychological the tendency among many is to rule out or ignore the direct attention of a personal God upon the course of development. The whole matter appears in the growth of the human mind, a product of the combined activity of all the various constituents of the soul of man, working with and upon his natural and social conditions. The effect of this is again to cool religious ardor.

This habit of mind could be easily illustrated at greater length from the actual life of our churches, from the growth of so many false religions which are all rooted somehow in the mind of to-day, rooted in those merely sentimental views of religion and religious problems which the observing of absolute truth always stimulates. The answer could be illustrated also from certain theories of education, of ethics in business, of ideals in art, of national government and the national spirit which are current around us.

Signs of a Change.

But in more recent years the signs of a great change have grown more numerous and more important. For example, even in a practical sphere outside the church, the keen hunger for certainty is asserting itself with great vigor. Men are learning to dread the effect on the social system of a loosened grasp upon the absoluteness of the moral law. They see that the state cannot survive, if it is based only upon changing ethical moods, and not upon objective and eternal laws. But how can moral law be absolute without a living God who ordains and administers the law for living human wills with inflexible righteousness? And how can the law of God be known by man unless God has made it known clearly, authoritatively and finally? There is nothing which society needs more to-day, and which it demands of the theologian more loudly, than a theology which shall establish securely the ancient prerogative of God as the supreme and the absolute fountain of definite laws for the conduct of man.

But if this be so then historical method must receive at once its conversion and its baptism. The history of man must be delivered from the tyranny of the mechanical categories.

The Atonement—III.

BY D. R. DUNGAN

This third time I am coming to you, and feel that with it, enough shall have been said for the present on the subject now in hand. Hilaskomos, that which propitiates or appeases, is used by John. 1 John 2:2: "And he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the whole world." That Jesus propitiated for the sins of the whole world by living in it, by his parables, is out of the question. So in the fourth chapter and tenth verse: "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins."

In Heb. 2:17, we have hilaskomai. This is the verse in full: "Wherefore it behooved him in all things to be made like unto his brethren, that he might become a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make propitiation for the sins of the people."

It is passing strange that the king's translators rendered this word in this place by make reconciliation. Men are to be reconciled to God, but this related to things pertaining to God. Hence the propitiatory sacrifice made by the Christ was made to God, not to man. In it justice became satisfied, and it became possible to save man and yet be just. I will now give a few quotations without any reference to the original from which they are translated.

Matt. 26:28: "For this is my blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many unto the remission of sins." Heb. 9:22: "And apart from the shedding of blood there is no remission." 1 Cor. 15:3: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which I received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." Heb. 1:3: "When he had made purification of sins, sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high." Heb. 9:26: "But Every self-conscious human being is, on this view, in some measure a beginner of history. You cannot explain him wholly by his environment, for he is, as it were, part of his own environment, and the creator with each act of his genius of a new environment both for himself and others. For myself, I should have more hope for a constructive theology, more assurance that it would arise speedily before our minds, gaining the assent of vast multitudes, if I saw in the life of the church to-day the depth of a great life. And so we return to our first point, that heroism and experience and systematic thought can never live apart from one another; that only out of mighty convictions can mighty heroisms arise, and that these only arise out of the depths of a mighty moral revolution; and yet the latter again depends upon what men are and what men believe.

now once at the end of the ages hath he been manifested to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." The meaning here cannot be mistaken. The illustration comes from the sacrifices of the law; the high priest offered the atoning sacrifice that sin might be removed. This was done every year, but Christ came not in the end of the year but in the end of the ages, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. All these sacrifices required a death, the shedding of blood, and Christ shed his blood that our sins might be washed away.

Galatians 3:13: "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us; for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." It was not by living in the world that this was done, but by being crucified, by dying and becoming a sacrifice for sin. Rom. 5:6-8: "For while we were yet weak, in due season Christ died for the ungodly. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die; for peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his own love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." This is the thought of 14:15: "Destroy not with thy meat him for whom Christ died." 1 Cor. 8:11: "For through thy knowledge he that is weak perisheth, the brother for whose sake Christ died." In 2 Cor. 5:21 we have a like thought: "Him who knew no sin he made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in him." This is like the statement in the Hebrew letter, 9:27, 28: "And inasmuch as it is appointed unto men once to die, and after this cometh judgment; so Christ also, having been once offered to bear the sins of many, shall appear the second time, apart from sin, to them that wait for him unto salvation." The first time Christ came it was with a sin offering for the redemption of the race, but the second time it will be not to make a sacrifice for sin but apart from, or without, a sin offering.

Thus we have Christ, Peter, Paul, John, and several of the prophets to assist us in knowing the facts concerning the atonement, the propitiation, the redemption which was in Christ Jesus, the sacrifice which he made for us, shedding or permitting his blood to be shed for the remission of sins, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. This kind of evidence, but just a few more scriptures will serve for a closing.

1 Peter 2:24: "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body upon the tree, that we, having died unto sins, might live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye are healed." 3:18: "Because Christ also suffered for sins once, the righteous for the unrighteous, that he might bring us to God." 1 John 1:7: "And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Rev. 1:5: "Unto him that loved us and loosed us from our sins by his blood." 5:9: "And they sing a new song, saying, Worthy art thou to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and didst purchase unto God with thy blood, men of every tribe and people and nation."

Every figure and form of presentation which could have been selected is found in the New Testament, employed to teach us that we are the purchased possession of the Son of God, that he purchased us with his own blood, he gave himself for us, by his stripes we are healed; he gave himself a ransom for all to be testified in due time. If it is possible to teach anything by the use of words, then that Christ took our nature and suffered in our stead, died upon the cross, took his blood and went into the holiest place, having obtained eternal redemption for us, is clearly taught.

This, then, is the sum of it all: Christ came into the world to save sinners. To do this, he must make it possible for God to be just while pardoning those who have sinned. But as God did not see proper to pardon men unless they turn away from sin and accept of the Son, he had to show men the true way of life, that they might believe on him and turn and be saved. But that men might believe he wrought miracles in their presence, and gave them truth that could not have come from any but a divine source. He had to teach men the heinousness of sin and the blessedness of righteousness; he had to live and walk and teach that men might be persuaded to accept of the atonement when it should be provided. The atonement was made in his death and suffering, and in the offering before God of his own blood for the loosing away of human guilt.

CHAPTER I.

Dessie was planning. Curled up in a large chair in her father's study, with theological volumes all around her, she appeared a most studious young woman. Her head, crowned with its heap of shining hair, was bent over a sheet of paper on which were columns of figures and memoranda.

It was a bright spring day, and multitudes of birds were calling all indwellers out into the cheery sunshine. But Dessie was not just then thinking of the birds or anything near her. She was planning for her wedding, now several months distant. She had gone over the list of necessities in the way of invitations, flowers, luncheon, etc., and last but not least a dainty trousseau. She then counted again for accuracy [the cash on hand in a very businesslike way.

Now, just a word about this "cash on hand." When Dessie was a tiny, white-haired baby in her cradle her mother, who had had a pretty wedding and a happy marriage, began to plan for a day of like happiness for her own little daughter. Realizing that their work in life would never give them many luxuries, she devised this plan. She constructed what she named a mite box, sealing it with a firm determination that come what may it was never to be opened until Dessie needed a trousseau. This day, though she said but little about it, was never in her own mind eliminated from her daughter's life. At the end of every week something, no matter how small, was put into the mite box.

Ah, the calm faced, white haired mother could have told of many little sacrifices that this box had cost. Once in a great while a paper bill was slipped in, but usually it was merely a dime or a nickel. She even knew days when the best she could give was a penny or a postage stamp; yet the custom remained unbroken.

When at last the box was opened it was found to contain, postage stamps and all included, the sum of sixty dollars. How precious the money seemed, and how she thanked the one who had had such tender forethought. It was a very shrewd calculation; for when everything was counted the cost was found to almost equal the amount.

"Oh, I am sure it will be very pretty," she said to herself, as her mind wandered away from the figures; "not like Anna Hay's wedding, of course, in which the cost of one costume exceeded all my resources—but I shall be very happy, anyhow." And then her mind went out to the devoted young man in a distant city, hard at work in a medical college.

All at once the voice of a man outside penetrated her quiet retreat in the study. She tiptoed to the window and listened. It was George Van Ness, the man who held a mortgage on their little home.

"Yes," he was saying, haughtily, "I ask you to vacate. I make sale of this property one month from to-day, and so I warn you. I do not hesitate to do this since you have not tried to pay the debt."

"Have not tried, did you say?" interrupted the minister.

"Yes, sir, have not tried. If you had used the brains you have to other advantage than pounding away at people's sins, you'd have a house to live in. But that is always the way with you preachers. You work the least of any class of people, and expect the most favors. Remember, one month from to-day," he said, starting away.

The minister looked at his creditor with something like anger in his eyes, but soon restrained himself, for long struggle had placed his emotions under control; and when he spoke it was in a calm, deep voice.

"Sir, the property evidently must be sold. I shall not ask you to wait longer, but do not say that I have made no effort to meet the payments. Sir, you know nothing of my life or the embarrassment this has been to me. I cannot explain it to you who stand apart from all my efforts in this place; but be assured you shall have possession within a month."

Van Ness said no more; he was soon rolling off in his automobile, the only one which the town of Crawford afforded. Mr. Van Ness, the wealthy financier, had never needed the services of a minister in his life. He never went to church, never gave a penny to a religious cause, and considered the preacher a surplus quantity in society. The one object of his life was to "get on in the world." He owned the one truly beautiful residence in the town; the people of Crawford worked in his factories, spent their money in his stores, or, if they were fortunate enough to save anything, put it into his bank. Apparently, he owned the town and the people.

The only humiliation to which Van Ness was ever known to be subjected was his failure to control his only child Charlie, who insisted on mingling indiscriminately with the young men of the place. Sometimes Charlie came home all right, and sometimes he didn't come home at all. But, as Van Ness said, when he was forced to talk about it, he "owned a few things anyhow."

Dessie inside the window had heard the unhappy conversation, and when the disagreeable man had gone she ran out, put her arms about her father's neck and kissed him. With her delicate fingers she brushed back the gray locks and said tenderly:

"Do not worry, papa dear, maybe there will be some way yet."

"Ah, but my dear child, even if we could pay the back payments, what are we to do about the next and the next? For only about half of the amount is paid. I have studied the situation carefully and do not see any hope for better days financially."

"Why, papa, that does not sound at all like your preaching. Should we not say instead 'Let us trust that it will come out all right,' that is like you."

"But, Dessie, I have hoped to be able to save the cottage—hoped in spite of everything—for mother's sake, but it must go."

"Oh, come, papa; we must still hope for something."

The father felt the gentle rebuke, and after a moment of silence said, "Thank you, my child. How shall I ever get along without you?"

"Now, now, dear papa, there it is again, and you have mother," she said, with a lump in her throat.

"Yes, yes, we shall never forget her, Dessie. How hard it will be to tell her all when she returns."

"Let us allow her to enjoy the full extent of her visit."

"Yes, and in the meanwhile we will get ready to—live—somewhere else."

"And—and—trust."

They were both thinking of the row of monotonous blackened houses that were for rent farther down the street, but neither had the heart to suggest one of these for their home.

Dessie went into the house and crept up to her pretty, little, low-ceiled room. Flinging herself into a chair she began to do the most serious thinking she had ever done. Ah, how those cruel words of Van Ness had broken into her love dream! How the words about her father's life burned in their injustice! In her happiness she had almost forgotten that there was such unkindness in the world; yet she did not despair, for hopes were too bright for that.

Down under the elms the preacher was thinking of the past. Having been called hither and thither he had had little opportunity to provide anything beyond a modest living for those nearest to him. So on being called to Crawford, realizing that he was now past middle life, he endeavored to buy a small home.

The cottage which they selected seemed to have been built especially for them, and was the delight of Mrs. White, who had always been obliged to live in a parsonage simply because it was a parsonage, whether it were homelike or not. How glad she was that they were once permitted to decide for themselves where their home should be. "Let us call it 'Peace Cottage,'" she exclaimed, when she had thoroughly inspected it, "for so it names itself." And so by that name it was known afterwards.

Its wide, sunny windows to the south in winter, its airy closets, its stained floors and the small garden in the rear with neat walks and flower beds, all appealed to her cheerful, orderly soul, and she felt she could rest here forever. But most of all, John White loved the tall elms which furnished shade for the yard and surroundings; for besides these trees there were few in Crawford. To-day, seated under them, he thought of the time when he was called to this little world where everybody toiled, and yet where some strong power seemed holding them in poverty. Yet since his coming ugliness had vanished from many places, and flowers and green grass had sprung up where only disorder and blackness had been; but with a deeper interest than that in the flowers had he watched lives growing out of their grime into soul purity.

Recently fiercer poverty than usual had swept over the town. The factories closed; everything was dead, and many suffered. The minister, like the rest, lived on a mere pittance, smaller even than his small salary, but his life was busier than ever. The living on a pittance would not have troubled him so much had he not undertaken to buy the home. For as the year swept by he faced the painful fact that he could not pay his debts, and that there was no immediate hope of better times. It seemed as if the wheels would never start again. The minister realized that there were but two paths—seek another field or give up the cottage. For the sake of his wife he concluded that the former must be done, and accordingly with regrets offered his resignation. There were tears in his eyes as he thought again of that day, not quite six months past. Although bitter in many respects, in others it was the sweetest day of his life, for then the people of Crawford showed him their hearts. Their kind words and tears overwhelmed him; he did not know he had come to fill so large a place in their lives. Yes, after John White had seen his people's hearts he went home praying for forgiveness and resolved that instead of giving up the charge he would give up the cottage. Ever since he had hoped against hope that something would change the sober aspect of things, but the impatience of Van Ness on this day brought the matter to a decision, and he promised to adjust it satisfactorily to him.

CHAPTER II.

Dessie's serious thinking was not without consequence. An hour afterward she was ringing the doorbell at the Van Ness homestead. She felt very strange and faint waiting there on the broad piazza for an answer to her summons, but once admitted to the presence of the man of wrath her fears subsided and she thought only of her errand.

"Mr. Van Ness," she began, in her sweet, earnest voice, "I have called to ask you if you will give us another month on the cottage. I can cancel the one back payment and I think there will be some way to pay the other very soon. Maybe the factories will start, or something will happen."

The man cast a scornful look at her and said haughtily, "What a silly proposition! Now, even if you settled the back payments, what are you going to do about all the others? As to the factories starting, I assure you that will not be this year, and things do not happen in this world."

What should she do? She was determined not to cry. After a pause she said:

"Sir, will you take the forty-five dollars and give us the added month?"

"Forty-five dollars," he repeated. "Small business; but why, if your father had this money and wished to pay it, did he not give it to me when I called this morning?"

"Mr. Van Ness, this is my own money, and I decided to give it after you had gone."

"And how do you happen to have this when you are just out of school?"

Dessie's pink cheeks turned crimson. No one had ever been told about the mite box, and above all, how could she tell him? And what right had he to ask such a question? She stammered: "My mother saved it for—for my wedding day."

"And you think the day is too slow coming, do you?" he said, looking at her with a little more interest.

"Oh, Mr. Van Ness," she cried, in almost childish embarrassment, "you see, I am to be married next month, and I do so want to have the wedding in Peace Cottage, the only place that ever seemed like home to us."

There, splash, in spite of everything, went a tear down on her spotless sleeve. It was not the tear, for the man was not susceptible to such signs of emotion; it was not the argument, for that was weak and womanish, but something in the pure, earnest face softened the hard lines and he took the money which she held out to him. It might have been that taking money was such a habit with Mr. Van Ness that it could not be overcome in this instance.

"Well, well," he said, turning away, "go tell your father he may have the sixty days."

"Oh, thank you, sir, we will all be so grateful to you, and if there are any wedding fees—"

But he waved her off and she soon left his house, walking home a little more briskly than she had come, and wondering all the while if any other girl ever thought of a fifteen-dollar trousseau.

Of course the planning had to be done all over to balance the diminished "cash on hand." But after much more figuring and erasing of figures, she concluded that it could really be done.

"I am so happy, anyhow," she kept saying to herself, "and then since everything is to be so simple I'll just send for mamma the day before the wedding and surprise her by having everything ready; but how busy I shall be doing all the sewing myself!"

The day before Dessie's wedding was a busy one for John White. Not because of the wedding, but other duties and calls seemed more numerous than usual. He was early at work in his study, for he had a funeral discourse to deliver at 9:30. Then after the funeral he went to the stricken home to offer what consolation he could. He no sooner reached home than a woman who was having serious domestic trouble called to see him. Would he tell her what to do? Should she be divorced? What about the children, etc.? But could not Mr. White convert her husband from the error of his ways?

He listened patiently to her story, glad to help her in any way that he could, sent her away with a little more of hope in her heart and never complained that she had made his dinner two hours late. Then a happy couple called to have him perform a marriage ceremony. This pleasant duty being over, he hastened to a home where lay a dying child, fully expecting upon his arrival to find that the dark-winged messenger had preceded him; but instead, the life lingered on until far into the night, and when at last the end came, the minister offered the prayer which took away the sting and rebellion and left in its place a holy peace. When he turned his steps homeward a storm was gathering in the west and mutterings of thunder and flashes of lightning grew more and more fierce, yet he hoped by quickening his steps to reach home before the storm burst over him. As he was passing a long, lonely lumber yard he heard a deep moan, then a cry for help, and something that sounded like an oath. He stopped, listened and discovered that it came from far down below the lumber heaps where the river ran in the gorge.

Again came the cry. Someone was in trouble, but he was alone and unarmed. Should he go to the rescue? A happy circumstance presented itself. Down the street a carriage, drawn by two horses, came tearing at full speed. By the lightning he recognized them as those of George Van Ness who, with his wife, was returning from a social function in a neighboring city. The minister halted them, told them quickly the situation and then said:

"Mr. Van Ness, someone needs our help; will you go with me to see what we can do?"

"Oh, I cannot, White, it is too late, and I must hurry home before the storm catches me."

"But what if some life is at stake?"

"Oh, it is just some of these poor trash who have got into a fight. I won't mix up with it. You can do as

Cross Currents and Roaring Rapids

A Little Prelude.

Before plunging into my main thesis I will once more, according to my favorite practice, indulge in an exordium concerning episodes in the work of our own churches of Christ. For these beloved communions naturally occupy the foreground in my perspective view. Last week I enjoyed a delightful afternoon in fellowship with a young preacher just arrived from America. Frank Forster, belonging to Birkenhead, and formerly a member of the church of Christ there (founded by J. M. Van Horn and then ministered to in succession by J. J. Haley, E. Brearley and G. Rapkin), has had the benefit of a course at Kimberlin Heights college, Tenn. He then for a year has preached with a church in Pennsylvania, and now comes home to the old country at the call of the English board to become minister at Margate, where I have been for some months holding the fort till a pastor could be found, by going regularly for Sunday preaching. Bro. F. Forster is a delightful personality. He will undoubtedly capture the hearts of the Margate congregation. His American experiences have wonderfully developed his powers. As he is still a very young man his life's work lies before him. His paullo-post-future will be likely to include some fine records, for he is an earnest student and seems ambitious of achieving great successes. The Forsters of Birkenhead are a remarkable family. Charles Forster is one of our preachers in Vermont. Another brother, W. B. Forster, and two sisters, Ada and Caroline, are diligent students in my Bible correspondence course. Ada Forster is likely to become a missionary in the foreign field.

In Wild Wales.

To my mind some of the most interesting of present day struggles for the promotion of freedom of conscience are being waged in the lovely principality which possesses, as I have always noted, an indefinable charm for all cultured Americans. I find that all traveling Americans are dissatisfied if they do not see Scotland, Wales and Ireland as well as England. In those beautiful sections of the united kingdom the most diverse conditions of religious thought, practice, tradition and system prevail. America has imported much from each. But in each of the three constant quantities subsist which nothing seems able to disturb. For instance the persistence of Irish Romanism is simply astonishing. So is the solidity of Scotch Presbyterianism. And so is the sturdiness of Welsh Calvinistic Methodism in the northern half of the principality, as the southern is the permanent stronghold of the Baptists, who possess the land in that region.

Just now a fierce war is raging between the government and the county councils throughout the whole of Wales, round the great question of religious education. Passive resistance in England I have several times in these articles explained and referred to. That movement is still agitating the land. In hundreds of spots in turn people are summoned for the payment of the education rate and many are put in prison because they arrange that there shall be no goods to seize. On this matter there can be no possible peace as long as the present Tory administration is in power, which will probably be till the next general election is due through the lapse of time. But in Wales the Free churchmen, who virtually compose the nation, have adopted a very different and much more efficient mode of combating the policy of the government. It has not been left to individuals to encounter the strength of the law enforcing the unrighteous act. The sagacious and astute Welsh leaders perceived that the county councils formed the first line of defense and they promptly occupied that line. The county councils in eight out of the twelve Welsh counties adopted the provisions and the working of the act and proceeded to put it into execution, but they did it in a very clever way, by taking the report of the authorities on the efficiency of the denominational schools as it stood. This simple expedient has had most peculiar results. Most of these schools are reported on as anything but up to the requirements, and therefore, according to the act, they are entitled to an extra aid grant from the government to put them into proper order. Now, the county councils proceed to claim the grant in full instead of levying a rate. And they refuse to appoint managers unless the full grant is awarded. The government is in a peculiar fix and has brought into parliament a special coercion bill for Wales. All Britain is now laughing at the dilemma in which the government has fixed itself. Curious developments are looked for. Little Wales has often been too much for Tory England, and it will be so once again.

The Fury of the Highlanders.

One of the most extraordinary situations ever witnessed in Scotland has been created by the action of a certain religious section which has its chief strongholds in the Highlands of the north. It will be remembered that two years ago a magnificent example of consummated Christian reunion was furnished by the coalition into one denomination (called the United Free church of Scotland) of the famous and powerful Free church and the celebrated, though not so wealthy or influential, United Presbyterian church. All lovers of religious unity and believers in religious federation rejoiced at that event. But the sequel was not free from disappointment. All through last year protests were heard from a small minority of the members of the old Free church who had not been in favor of the reunion, but were not numerous or strong enough to prevent it. Their Highland churches, however, some of which are led by ministers of considerable ability, have not ceased to repudiate all sympathy with the arrangement, and during the last few months litigation has been initiated by an appeal to the house of lords. The remnant who have refused to recognize the United Free church have organized themselves into what they call still the Free church, though outsiders style these conscientious, old, conservative Presbyterians the "Wee Frees," or the "Wee Kirk." There is something profoundly pathetic in the spectacle of these fine old Highlanders sticking thus tenaciously to the system of their fathers. They are pertinaciously claiming the portion of the temporalities which they reckon to be due to them. What the result of the suit will be no one ventures to conjecture, but in the north this is considered the most momentous ecclesiastical cause ever brought into the law courts in respect of the churches of Scotland. Meantime, the United Free church is offering to compromise on most generous terms. The offer includes the gift of all the manse connected with the churches of the "Wee Frees," the benefits of the widows' and the superannuation funds and a lump sum of 50,000 pounds.

The Three General Assemblies.

Last week was a glorious time for the Christian folk of Auld Reekie. Edinburgh, the beautiful northern Athens, is always in gala mood when great religious conclaves meet, and there have been three of these simultaneously. The Established church of Scotland, the United Free church and the Free church all met in their general assemblies. And I know of few exercises more interesting than that of reading the reports of the great addresses of the moderators of these famous bodies. Scotland is in a peculiar position. It has to face some great controversies which are preparing for the near future. One of these is the crucial debate on disestablishment into which the nation must at no distant date plunge. This will come on in Scotland long before England is ready for it. Dr. Gillespie, moderator of the assembly of the Scottish church, sounded an eloquent paean in glorification of the establishment. He gloated over the Erastian principle as fulsomely as could an Episcopalian. Surely there is something almost gro-

As Seen from the Dome

By F. D. Power

It was my privilege, June 12, to preach the baccalaureate to the graduating class of the West Virginia university at Morgantown. This is a flourishing institution, with more than one thousand students. It dates back to 1814, when Virginia incorporated the Monongalia academy located at this place. Morgantown is the county seat of Monongalia county, a city of 10,000 on the Monongahela river, a hundred miles east of Wheeling and the same distance south of Pittsburgh. It is beautiful for situation, a temperance town, and well suited to be the seat of an institution of learning. The river is spelled one way and the county another, through the blunder of a legislator in introducing a bill, and for all time the mistake of this solon is likely to be perpetuated.

The original building was a one-story brick with two rooms. Then a two-story structure took its place in 1828, and a lottery was authorized by the legislature to secure $20,000 of endowment. In 1868, it became West Virginia agricultural college and later West Virginia university; and to-day it has eight beautiful buildings and is organized with ten colleges and a fine corps of instructors. Dr. D. B. Purinton is the accomplished and able president. Prof. Cass Woolery was at one time professor here and Bethany has contributed a number of her sons to the service of the institution. J. J. Tisdall is the efficient pastor of our church, which has a membership now of one hundred and is doing a blessed work. It was my good fortune to meet with them four years ago when Prof. Woolery was still with them. After the communion service we adjourned to the college chapel, where an inspiring audience of fifteen hundred young people greeted the preacher morning and evening. There was only one embarrassment—the necessity of preaching in a gown, but the millinery was academic and not ecclesiastical, and after all it is a dress which more nearly conforms to that of the apostles and the Prince of preachers.

From Morgantown it is not a great distance to Bethany. The old college has had a good year. Two hundred and forty-one have been enrolled. The sixty-third commencement was a happy one. The trustees were present in force. Among those present were Judge G. A. Campbell, J. J. Barclay, M. M. Cochran, William H. Nave, Col. Alexander Campbell, Hon. W. H. Graham, Hon. T. W. Phillips, Senator Oliver S. Marshall, C. B. Scott, Campbell Jobes, A. L. White, W. S. Kidd, George H. Anderson, Oliver C. Vordrey, W. R. Errett, and E. T. Norton, Frank H. Main and Charles H. Irwin were added to the board. Excellent reports were made by President Cramblet and the executive committee, showing a hopeful condition of the college finances and good progress in all departments of the college life. Sixteen thousand has been secured on the third block of $50,000 in the endowment. Water and electric lights are now found in all the buildings. The Oglebey clock in the tower rings out the hours and sounds the recitation periods in the class rooms. Phillips hall and the new boys' dormitory have been put in first-class condition. The foundations for the new gymnasium have been laid and an alumnus has intimated his willingness to consider the restoration of the society halls, destroyed by fire in 1879. In all respects the college is getting well out of the woods, but it needs a permanent fund of not less than $250,000 and better equipment and more liberal salaries for its faithful teachers before it is fully in the way of up-to-date service and worthy success. Let its alumni and friends rally to its support as they should and its future is secured.

Commencement exercises were held under the maples on the campus in a natural amphitheatre. The speech making was optional with the graduates this year. Miss Virginia Stewart, of Washington C. H., O., delivered the Greek oration, Mr. Cyrus McN. Yocum, of Steubenville, O., the salutatory, and Mr. George W. Watson, of Holbrook, Pa., the valedictory. Other speeches were by Charles Edward Geis, of Ohio; Joseph F. Hay, of Kansas; Francis W. Pittman, of West Virginia, and R. T. Kersey, of Missouri. The special address to the graduates was by W. R. Warren, editor of the Christian Worker of Pittsburgh. His subject was "Bethany Ideals," and the theme was handled in a very forcible and felicitous manner. Other graduates besides those named were: Anna Ruth Bourne, of Kentucky; William S. Stucky, of Kentucky; Mary Virginia Hagerman, of Kentucky; William H. Thompson, of Pennsylvania; John F. Ryan, of Ohio; James E. Harvey, of Pennsylvania; C. C. Welbourne, of California; Emily Roberts, of Pennsylvania, and Ardow B. Carter, of Ohio. Those receiving the Master's degree were Ray O. Miller, William H. Erskine, Dr. Benjamin E. Helprin, William D. Turner and W. J. Wright. There were graduates also in music, art, elocution, and in the business department. The honorary degree of M. A. was conferred on John P. Sala and Emma M. Camp, of Ohio, and the Ph. D. on Prof. James C. Keith. Seven of the graduates are ministers of the gospel, and two others, William H. Erskine and Miss Virginia Stewart, go to Akita, Japan, as missionaries.

There were other pleasing features of the closing festivities: the athletic field day, the class day exercises, the Neotrophian literary society's exhibition with W. C. Prewitt's excellent address, the closing exercise of the A. L. I. with Charles W. Watson's thoughtful and eloquent message, the alumni meeting with Warren presiding and speeches by a number of the older men, the unveiling of portraits of some of Bethany's sons secured by Prof. A. R. Bourne for the chapel, the concert of the music department under Professor Moos, the happy reunions, exhibition of art work, etc., etc. The alumni took action to secure a larger attendance of old students at these annual gatherings, and all the meetings were characterized by the hopefulness and push that belong to the new Bethany.

There was a large attendance of old students and friends of the college, among them Charles Irwin, W. J. Harvey, W. C. Pendleton, Fred E. Gilmore, Percy Cochran, Mr. and Mrs. B. C. Hageman, Dr. Hal Watson, J. D. Hurd, A. B. Wells, W. R. Jinnett, Dr. Devore, E. J. Hart, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Moninger, Clarence Mitchell, Chester Sprague, J. F. Green, Frank Chapman, G. B. Evans, J. W. Yoho, W. H. Field, W. E. Gordon, Dr. Rosa L. Oxer, Alfred Place, William Fisher, W. E. Pierce, William M. Long, Geo. Curtis and A. Linkletter. The old commencement goes were there enjoying the "performances." "Biz" was as active as of yore. Bethany's people were as hospitable as they have ever been. The sky line is the same. The village has taken on more white-wash and paint than for years. Electric lights gleam and automobiles rush through the streets. Bethany mansion and Point Breeze and Evergreen Cottage and Pendleton Heights and the rest of the gracious and happy homes were wide open. The road to Wellsburg is as picturesque and beautiful as ever.

"On the banks of the old Buffalo, my boys,
Old Bethany evermore shall stand:
For has she not stood,
Since the days of the flood,
On the banks of the old Buffalo?"

Some changes have occurred in the college faculty. Prof. Philip Johnson has a year's absence and goes to Yale. Prof. B. L. Kershner takes the presidency of Kee Mar college, Hagerstown, Md. Professor Erskine goes to Japan, Profs. Ethel Streater, W. D. Turner and Pearl Keith have resigned. The vacancies will all be filled by competent instructors.

Sunday, June 19, the church at Newark, O., opened their new house of worship. It was my great privilege to share in their rejoicing. The house is one of the most modern and thoroughly satisfactory that I have seen in many a day. It is the best church in this city of 20,000 people. I have met with these brethren in their little sanctuary and have known their struggles. It was a great day for them. They now number 600 souls and have a Sunday-school of 500. H. Newton Miller is the pastor, a devoted man, who has for three years served them and is greatly honored and loved. Minor Lee Bates, the former pastor, preached a tender and beautiful sermon in the morning and in the afternoon we had the regular dedicatory service and greetings from city pastors and from former ministers of the congregation, George F. Crites, T. M. Madden and C. A. Hill. Others present were Ira Billman, W. S. Bonham, W. H. Elwinger, Asa McDaniel and C. M. Cooper. The church was organized in 1884 by J. F. Rowe. Robert Moffett has been their steadfast helper. M. L. Bates served there most efficiently for six years. The new house will accommodate 1,000 people and has every comfort and convenience. The property is worth $25,000. Provision was made for the financial needs in advance of dedication. The church is known as the "bee hive" and has great promise for the future. Four confessed Christ during the dedication services.

you like," he said, drawing up his lines. "You had better not be out in this storm," he called back into the darkness, as he dashed off.

But the minister had already entered the yard and was following the direction of the sound. It led him to a low, wet spot near the river, where a lone man lay with a deep wound in his head, the would-be robbers or murderers having taken to their heels.

The man was breathing, but unconscious. The minister drew him out of the mud and carried and dragged him as best he could to a higher spot between the lumber heaps. He constructed a rude shelter by placing boards from one stack to the other, finishing it just as the rain came driving down upon them. Taking a kerchief from his pocket he wiped the mud and blood from the man's face, and when the next flash came he stood horror stricken as he recognized the face of Charlie Van Ness.

Without waiting for the rain to cease he made his way to the doctor's home farther up the street, and they two took the man to his home.

At last John White, tired and exhausted, sought his bed. "This has been a busy day," he said to himself, as he fell asleep, "but which of the duties could have been omitted?" Yet there had not been a cent added to his salary, while down near the river, where the wounded man's head had been pillowed, the water had risen full eighteen inches.

After all, Dessie's wedding was a pretty one. The June morning rose calm and bright, and myriads of raindrops from last night's downpour sparkled in the sunlight. They ascertained that Charlie had been seriously but not fatally injured, and then went about their preparations for the wedding. The fields supplied an abundance of green things for backgrounds, and the garden was full of roses which were plucked for the occasion. There was a dainty luncheon, though only a few of Dessie's most intimate friends were present. "You do not mind, do you, Dick, that everything is so plain and common?" she asked, after explaining to the young doctor the reason for her course.

"Common, Dessie!" cried he. "Why, my dear, this is the most uncommon wedding I have ever heard of. No costly robe could have beautified you as this deed of love has done."

Dessie came down in a gown of pure white lawn with only tucks and a ribbon for trimming and carried a bunch of white roses.

Something happened which for an instant seemed to threaten the order of the occasion. Just as John White was beginning the ceremony he was called to the door and someone handed him a large envelope. The minister went into his study for an instant and then came out happy and excited. "It's a deed to Peace Cottage," he exclaimed, "signed by George Van Ness—all debts are canceled. Praise the Lord!"

It did not spoil the wedding; it only delayed it until Dessie could explain and wipe away a few happy tears.

tesque in the very notion of Presbyterianism as a state concern. But Dr. Gillespie did not seem to see it. He may live to do so. The moderator of the United Free church—far and away a more powerful body than the establishment in Scotland—took a very different line. He, like all Free churchmen, looks forward confidently to the time when the establishment must go. But this gentleman, Dr. Gerald Balfour, troubled himself little about the matter, for he seemed rather disposed to regard the ultimate issue as a foregone conclusion. He talked chiefly of the splendid achievements of the United Free church and its grand outlook. On the other hand, the moderator of the "Wee Frees," Rev. Mr. MacQueen, a typical old covenanting Highlander, made the obnoxious and repudiated union his keynote. He called the coalition resulting in the consolidation of the United Free church "preposterous." And he followed a very lively diatribe in this direction by launching a packet of thunderbolts which he had been forging against the higher critics and the anti-Calvinists. The smallest of the three general assemblies, was by far the noisiest and the most demonstrative. It is often so. The obstructionist "claqueurs" are usually found in the minority. But the roaring freshet from the Highlands will at last quietly settle into the quietude of the beautiful expanse of Loch Lomond.

Death.

T. Henry Blenus.

Sitting in my study this Monday morning, after a strong mental and heart strain on yesterday, as I glance across the way, I can see an undertaker attaching the symbol of mourning and death to the front entrance of a home.

To the great rendezvous of the sons of Adam, another human being has been called. Every path in the world leads to the tomb, and every hour on the dial-plate is the last hour of some human being.

As I view for a moment this badge of sadness and heartache, this emblem of bleeding and crushed souls, and blighted and blasted human hopes, my own heart is in response, and that chord to be found in all human nature attunes itself sympathetically to the gentle touch of the soft voice of sorrow.

There are times when quiet and solitude have charms and when cheerfulness and joy give place to thoughtfulness and meditation—when even the griefs of those perhaps little known to us, arrest our attention and cause us to drop tears of sympathy and extend the hand of comfort and consolation.

Job characterizes death as being without order. All conditions and ages come under its power without distinction. The youth, buoyant with joyous hope and anticipation, the middle aged, whose cares and duties and designs are beginning to ripen to a promising fruition, the aged whose sands of life are well run—all are hurried to the tomb. Thousands and tens of thousands never fill out the so-called allotted span of life.

While standing beside the dead in the quiet and hushed chamber of death, we look upon that marble brow, that beamless eye now closed in long night, and know that before us is only a deserted, perishable tenement of human clay, we ask, has the breath of God, which so recently animated this now empty form, gone out and vanished into nothingness? Is there no light to dispel the darkness that now hangs like a pall over the home and above the grave? Is there no setting back in this tide of woe and sorrow? Yes, thank God, there comes the comforting, soul-cheering words of our Redeemer, breaking through the mist of darkness of the death gloom, and giving us hope for dismay: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me, shall never die." In these precious words we find the triumph of immortality. The terror of death is removed, and the messenger sent to summon us to our departure is transformed into an angel of mercy.

Missouri State Convention Notes

The hospitality of the Carrollton church was equal to every demand of the convention. Brother Kellar and his co-workers proved themselves admirable hosts. Everybody seemed pleased with the entertainment he received. The Editor and his wife will not soon forget their delightful stay in the home of Brother and Sister Lynn.

If the Christian churches of Missouri can hold a good convention against the counter attraction of the World's Fair they need not fear being eclipsed by anything likely to occur in the future. There was a large number of brethren and sisters who attached more importance to the work of the kingdom of God, as represented in our state convention, than to an immediate visit to the World's Fair. There were a few who loved the cause well enough to stay to the close, even though personal interests urged them to return home.

N. J. Nickerson, Memphis, Mo., vice-president of the convention, presided over the convention in the absence of the president during the first session. Being compelled then to leave, M. M. Goode, vice-president of the state board, was elected to succeed him. Brother Goode was called away before the close of the convention, and was succeeded by Brother Wharton, of Marshall, pastor of the church that is to entertain the next convention. There was a sharp, but good-natured, contest between Nevada and Marshall as to the place of the next convention, and Marshall won by a small majority.

So immediate and hearty was the response of the convention to the recommendations in the report of the committee on the state of the cause, printed elsewhere, that a large number were ordered to be printed immediately at a printing office in town and circulated in the convention before its adjournment. That the brethren generally recognize the need of what is therein recommended is one of the most hopeful signs of the times.

This was one of the most sociable conventions which we have ever attended. There was an utter absence of cliques and clans, and all seemed to mingle freely and to greet each other as brethren and sisters in the Lord. This is as it should be in a religious convention.

It was a great pleasure to see Brother Abbott looking so well again after his serious spell of sickness, and speaking with his old-time vigor. Let us all co-operate with him more faithfully, this year, and free him from that anxiety which is harder on him than his work. We are all hoping for a distinct advance along all the lines of our work in Missouri, the coming year, and now is the time to begin such advance.

There were not many of the old veterans present whom we were accustomed to see at Missouri conventions, many years ago. We never cease to miss the faces of Alexander Procter, G. W. Longan, O. P. Davis and others who have joined the great company gathering on the other shore. We were blessed, for all its while, with the presence of T. P. Haley who gave us a sermon at communion service on Lord's day that touched a responsive chord in all hearts. J. A. Dearborn, not so long identified with the work in Missouri, but widely known in Virginia, was also present and gave us his benediction. One dislikes to enroll the names of such men as J. W. Monser, J. B. Corwine, W. M. Featherston, and others of that class, among the veterans, but their long service and fidelity to all our Missouri interests entitles them to a place in that roll of honor.

During the progress of the convention the Editor found time to make brief visits to two of the aged saints of the Carrollton church, who were unable to attend the convention. One of these was Sister Hill, who, in her eighty-ninth year, sits in the sunshine of her faith and hope and looks eagerly forward to the time when she shall join the loved ones gone before. Dr. Tull is in his eighty third year, and we found his mind stored with blessed memories of the great men of our cause, who, in the past, have preached at this church. It was a delight to commune with these aged Disciples, in whose faces is already visible that light "which never shone on sea or land." Blessed is the church that has such members on its roll!

Our colleges in the state were generally well represented at the convention. There were President Johann and Professor Dugan, from Christian university; W. J. Lhamon, dean of Missouri Bible college; President Barham and Professor Stagner, Missouri Christian college at Camden Point; President J. B. Jones, of William Woods college, Fulton; President Buxton, of Dexter Christian college, and perhaps other representatives of these same schools. It was beautiful to see the harmony of feeling and sentiment existing between the representatives of all these institutions.

Our special artist, the assistant editor, caught a group of the delegates in front of the church, at the close of one of the afternoon sessions, and focused his camera upon them, and we reproduce on this page the forms and features of many who will be recognized by our readers. So, by word and picture, we have tried to present as much as possible of the Carrollton convention to our readers.

The addresses of F. M. Rains were the kind that we call "hits." Brother Rains knows the art of using striking statement and droll gesture to impress his point on an audience. "Our one business," he declared, "is to evangelize the world. The church might have fine buildings, organs, solos, duets, quartettes and uniforms—and miss the whole business." Much of church effort, he said, reminded him of some home guards, as they were called in his younger days. They drilled regularly "right, left, shoulder arms," but that was all they did. Churches, too, have their regular service, drill 52 Sundays in the year, but never get into a fight—with the enemy, of course, Brother Rains meant.

There are 400 churches in Missouri where there are no Sunday-schools. Brother Rains thought that here was an opportunity for a fight, and he did not think it necessary that there should be a rush to get a "great ecclesiastical surgeon" in the person of an evangelist or big preacher to "come and perform an operation," but let the church look abroad and see the great needs of the world. Only about one in seven of the Missouri churches, he stated, gives anything to foreign missions.

Independence had the honor of making the first $100 pledge to the Bible-school work. The church here, it will be remembered, raised $600 for foreign missions in March and $300 for the Home mission board work. One of its members, too, gave $1,000 to the Bible college at Columbia. Mexico was the next pledge of $100, and before the list was completed Maryville, Joplin, Union Ave. (St. Louis), First, Sedalia, Carrollton and Kansas City had agreed to raise the same amount. Hannibal paid $75 in cash, and churches pledging $50 were Marshall, First (St. Louis), Munro City, 11th and Locust, (Kansas City), Columbia and Nevada.

"Many a preacher suffers nervous prostration because he has too many babies to look after in his congregation. It's all right to be a baby, but not to be a baby when you ought to be a man." So said J. M. Rudy in his address on "The Future Bible-school." The child is the victim of the environment in which he is found, he contended, and the Sunday-school must supply the need from the outside. Provision, too, must be made for the age when the boy or girl acts for self in selection or rejection. In the senior department there ought to be the assimilated Bible or the Bible of experience.

One of the items programed was a symposium on the difficulties in missions in four different parts of the state. G. A. Hoffmann made an ideal chairman. With a wide knowledge of the subject himself he allowed the scheduled speakers their full time and contented himself with but brief comments. W. F. Turner, representing the southwest, said their trouble was not primarily a sparsely settled region, an ignorant and vicious element, nor antis, but chiefly their difficulties were, (1) the lack of preachers who would work for a small salary, (2) an academy, (3) funds.

Bro. J. T. Craig's paper was concerned with southeast Missouri, which contains 40 out of the 140 counties in the state, and where social and industrial conditions are such as can be found in no other part. First, there is, wrote Brother Craig, "a great day coming, but not come; a great day going but not gone." The present unstable conditions of the lumbermen will change to a day of agriculture. The greatest present need, he thought, is a college. Brother Creel, who read Brother Craig's paper in the latter's absence, pointed out that he did not mention one great difficulty, a deadening influence in that whole country, viz, the anti-Bible-school, anti-organ, anti-lesson leaf, anti-societies. Brother Creel's remedy is, (1) a school, (2) a good man to go to and stay in and organize the district.

W. H. Jones thought that in northwest Missouri it is a question of the opening of the pocket-book. This is the district of the college preacher whose rush of study, frequent change of place and limited income weighed against the best work. Other difficulties mentioned were the numerous offerings, the change in the month and the fact that local prosperity makes state needs seem distant.

"The Eden of Edens"—the northwest—was represented by J. E. Davis, of Stanberry, who thought the preachers are at the bottom of most of the trouble. Some of them, he said, will be more offended at the word "go" than the denominationalist will at the word "baptism," though both words are taken from the same Scripture. On the other hand many churches are absorbed in local success and "some preachers can't get into church over their church boards."

Brother Hoffmann very pointedly summed up an interesting presentation and urged the convention to remember that though there are 180,000 Disciples in Missouri there is one portion of the state where there are only 5,000 in a population of a million souls.

George Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., made a very fine address on behalf of church extension, which he characterized as "the automobile of the reformation," and which means 60 per cent profit a year on money invested in this way. Brother Darsie showed a fine grasp of the situation, and his address was one of the most convincing that we have heard on this theme, while the manner of its delivery held the closest attention of the audience till the last word was uttered. Brother Darsie has for over twenty years been preacher for the church where W. T. Moore began his ministry after graduating from Bethany college. There is at Frankfort, in the house of Mrs. Landon Thomas, sister-in-law of Mrs. Tubman, who built and endowed the Augusta, Ga., church, where Howard Cree now ministers, a room still called "Preacher Moore's room."

Marshall won the next convention by a vote of 71 to 54—a small vote where about 400 delegates were registered. Nevada was well championed by its pastor, G. D. Edwards, but Blalock and Wharton had the central position of their town to aid their eloquence and the offer of warm hearts and sugared strawberries.

We hope to publish Bro. Geo. H. Combs' fine sermon on Immortality.

The Daily Democrat, of Carrollton, gave many columns of space to the convention, and showed its enterprise by publishing some portraits of some of our prominent brethren in the state. The Democrat was accorded the thanks of the convention.

Resolutions pledging support to efforts to eradicate vice and other evils were passed, as well as endorsing the consolidation of the conventions, and recommending the churches to consider, in their financial outlook, the sending of delegates regularly to the convention.

Fuller details of the discussion on Education and the Constitution we shall have to reserve for a subsequent issue.

W. A. Moore, who was elected to take the place of H. F. Davis, the faithful retiring Bible-school secretary, is already taking hold of the reins of office, and in our next issue we hope to be able to announce the new secretary's address.

Report of Committee on State of the Cause.

Your standing committee on the state of the cause begs leave to submit the following report:

There is little variation in the state of the cause in our state from year to year, and hence there must necessarily be similarity in the reports of this committee. We are glad to be able to report a steady if slow growth in our missionary offerings as shown by the official reports of the various missionary organizations. The large number of non-contributing churches, however, which stand aloof from the general work of the brotherhood, thus depriving themselves of the stimulus which comes from participation and union with their sister churches in carrying out Christ's commission, is a matter of profound regret, and one that demands our earnest and prayerful consideration.

While we are glad to report a slowly awakening interest in the cause of Christian education on the part of the churches of the state, we are bound to confess that the apathy which yet abounds on that subject, in view of the crying need for an educated ministry and educated workers in various departments of service in the kingdom of God, is such as to raise the question whether the mass of our membership has any just appreciation of the responsibility which rests upon us as the largest religious body in the state. Only a few of the churches relatively observed educational day or are doing anything to supply an adequately trained ministry for our preacherless churches.

We can but call attention once more to the large number of unshepherded churches and isolated members without the feeding and training to build them up in the Christian life, and urge again that not only the officers of this convention and our state board, but every minister in the state, do what lies in their power to remedy this lack among us, by the grouping of contiguous churches and securing competent ministers of the word to care for them.

Your committee laments the general lack of interest, not to say enthusiasm, in our state mission work. Something is wrong that a people numbering 180,000 members are not doing more in caring for the weak churches and in evangelizing the vast regions of our state yet unevangelized. Look at the city of St. Louis, with three-quarters of a million people, in which we have a membership of less than 4,000. Does not that great metropolis, with its teeming population, so large a part of which is without God and without hope in the world, appeal to us as servants of Christ holding a dispensation of truth for the people of our day?

In view of these facts which confront us—the needs of our state on one hand, and the small amount we are doing compared with what we might do to supply them, on the other—your committee feels that it can do no better than to repeat its recommendation of a year ago: that special attention be given to developing the spiritual life of our members, to the end that they may consecrate themselves to the doing of the work which our Lord has laid upon us in this great commonwealth. It is only as we are united in closest fellowship with Christ, and see with his eyes the vision of the needs of our state and of the world, that we can accomplish our great mission.

We believe the time has come for a forward movement in Missouri, and would suggest as our motto for the coming year the words which Jehovah spoke to Moses at the Red Sea: "Speak to the people, that they go forward."

To promote this forward movement, your committee would recommend:

1. That our ministers throughout the state give much attention in their preaching to the deeper things of the religion of Christ and seek in every way to deepen the spiritual life of our members.

2. That they cultivate more reverence in the house of God and give special attention to the worship, that it may have its due prominence in the Lord's day assembly.

3. That more care be taken in the selection and training of ministers, and that we be jealous of their character and reputation. Only those should be enrolled as preachers who are of approved character and ability and are actually engaged in the work of the ministry.

4. That churches exercise greater care in receiving members—both by baptism and otherwise. The habit of urging members from other places to unite with the church without a letter leads to confusion and degrades the privilege of church membership. In receiving persons for baptism, care should be taken, especially with the young, to impress them with a sense of the importance of the step they are about to take and its meaning.

5. That we rely not upon our own strength and wisdom to make this forward movement, but that we look to God for his power and guidance, who alone can enable us to do the work that lies before us.

Synopsis of Committee Reports.

Foreign Missions.—In 1903 the number of churches in Missouri contributing was 236, which is a loss of 84 in four years. This decrease was gradual and the committee recommends special efforts to largely increase the offerings as well as the number of the churches and use the prayer meetings more.

Benevolent Association.—Opened about 18 years ago with five children, $50 and a five room house. The work has grown until last year the contributions were more than $70,000. Only 142 collections, however, were contributed by Missouri, and of these 90 were less than $10. The report called for a spreading of the knowledge of the work and a more liberal observance of the Easter day offering.

Ways and Means.—This committee insisted that in view of the wealth, culture and majesty of the state and the numbers of Disciples in it we must greatly enlarge our missionary work. An effort should be made to secure not less than $15,000 this year, and an apportionment based on this scale sent to the churches. It believed that to a limited extent the matter of modifying the duties of some of our evangelists so as to authorize them at certain seasons of the year to devote some time to organizing county co operations and securing means for sustaining other evangelists, would be a wise expedient. The board should have much freedom, but exercise its accustomed careful supervision. The committee further recommended earnest attention to the opening up of new work in large cities, especially St. Louis.

Orphanage, schools, etc.....131,250 00

Total.....$850,044 00

Christian Endeavor.—The superintendent's report showed 18,096 active members, 2,320 associate members, with a net gain of 2,534 during the year. The total number of societies was 468, baptisms 1,392 and money raised $10,016. The expenses were $34.40. Carrollton had the largest membership, Warrensburg running very close to it. The superintendent called for more money and recommended that field work should be taken up this year by the sending out of some young man or woman for three or four months.

This committee recommended that $1 be the minimum offering, that short tours to inaugurate new or strengthen old work be undertaken by workers, that men be encouraged to enter the ministry, that all societies contribute to the students' aid fund, report to superintendent, send a delegate to the next convention and that a whole afternoon and evening be reserved on its program for Christian Endeavorers.

C. W. B. M.—Owing to change of date of the convention the report was for six months only. It showed 185 societies, 3,886 members and $3,684 raised, an advance of $730.40 over the same period last year. The treasurer's report showed that $925.12 had been collected for expenses in the state. The Junior society raised $786.12 and had a membership of 2,763. Carthage secured the banner.

Permanent Fund.—The committee believed that a permanent fund that would provide for the expenses of administration, such as salaries of office force, rent, postage, etc., would be a large incentive to greater liberality where every dollar collected would go right into the field. It would also tend to greater efficiency. The committee therefore recommended that (1) contributions in money, property, bequests or otherwise be obtained as rapidly as possible; (2) annuity bonds be made and sold, interest paying; (3) the state board act immediately. "Let us no longer play at state missions. . . . Let us make this move a mighty force to reach those desired ends."

Student's Aid Fund.—There was considerable discussion of the committee's report, with the result that it was ultimately adopted as follows:

Because of the great need of the enlargement of this fund and the already overworked condition of the state missionary board we recommend:

(1) That this fund be placed in the custody of a corporation to be established under the laws of the state of Missouri, to be known as the Ministerial education society of Missouri.

(2) That a committee of five be appointed by the church to nominate and submit to this convention a board consisting of nine members, three to serve for one year, three for two years and three for three years.

(3) That said board shall draft a charter for the creation and government of such a corporation, also such by-laws and regulations for the enlargement, perpetuity and management of said funds, and shall submit the same to this convention for its ratification one year hence.

(4) That this convention shall nominate annually to this board three persons to fill vacancies on said board.

JEROBOAM'S IDOLATRY.—1 Kings 12:25-33.

Memory verses, 28, 30.

GOLDEN TEXT: Keep yourselves from idols.
—John 15:21.

While Jeroboam's revolt and the division of the kingdom had a certain religious value in counteracting that pride in political greatness which would have been fatal to Israel's religious mission, the credit for this was not due to the revolutionists. Jeroboam himself was only a vulgar demagogue, who used the righteous indignation of an oppressed people as the means of compassing his own ambition for kingship. And having led the revolt to a successful conclusion and established himself as ruler over the ten seceding tribes, he was ready to adopt any expedient which would perpetuate the division and fortify his own position.

There had already taken place, perhaps not a complete but a very considerable centralization of the worship in Jerusalem. Doubtless it had come to be pretty well understood, before the death of Solomon, that it was Jehovah's will that the worship should be centralized at the capital of the kingdom. The value of this arrangement as strengthening the union of the tribes had not been underestimated by David and Solomon. Neither was that aspect of it lost upon Jeroboam, whose problem now was to prevent the unity of national feeling from asserting itself in a political reunion. He saw that the king whose throne was at Jerusalem would have a great advantage so long as the people of both divisions went up to Jerusalem to worship.

So he made new altars, new places of worship, new feasts and new gods. Two things are to be noted about this politico-religious experiment. The first is that it failed from the standpoint of politics, for while it did, indeed, have an influence, perhaps a decisive influence, in preventing the reunion with Judah, it paved the way for a far more disastrous amalgamation of the ten tribes with their heathen neighbors, inasmuch that these tribes disappeared from the earth. The other is that it failed from the standpoint of religion, as any religion does which is concocted or adopted for purely worldly advantage. The worldly-wise ruler who created a false religion for political purposes is pilloried in history as "Jeroboam the son of Nebat which made Israel to sin."

Jeroboam's assertion regarding the golden calves which he had made, "These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of Egypt," seems too patently and stupidly false to win a moment's credence. But it is of a piece with the thought which underlies all of our modern idolatry. We state it more subtly, but the substance is no less crude. When we conduct our lives with reference only to material ends, when we act as though wealth and worldly fame and the other temporalities were the objects of greatest worth and of supreme desire, we are saying to ourselves, "These be thy gods." Let a man profess what he will, the thing that he seeks most zealously and serves most faithfully is his god. And he whose god is as the gods of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, need expect no happier issue to his life than that of the ten tribes who forfeited their birthright and lost their opportunity for both service and blessedness.

SOME MODERN IDOLS AND HOW TO OVERTHROW THEM.—Luke 12:15-21; Phil. 3:17-19.

For the Leader.

We come this evening to study a very timely subject. It is so because of our weakness. We are reminded at every step we take that we face some modern idol. The topic, "Some modern idols and how to overthrow them," in the qualified term "modern" brings the subject down to my day, up to my door, before my heart and conscience. In the scripture reading taken from Luke 12:15-21 we have the story of a man who worshiped an idol. Yet this man was unlike most devotees of the shrine in that he did not know that he worshiped an idol. His idol was money, earthly things. His idolatry was covetousness. It is the dangerous idolatry of our day because it veils itself. This is not the only form of idolatry to-day. There are others. Let us consider them all. But we must not overlook the fact that this is the big idol of our day.

For the Members.

1. Love of fame is an idol of all times, but with increasing adherents in present times. It is not an inherent evil. It is one of those things which is evil only when extended to an abuse of the normal. This is so of most evils. Love of fame, praise, place, cheering constituents, is the unlawful extension of the natural love of the approval of our fellows. But a high gift degraded takes rank in the class of the bad in proportion to its previous rank in the class of the good. Hence there is nothing so detestable and painful to behold in persons as this unlawfully extended love of approval.

2. Love of money is a modern idol. The old notion of respectability, based upon honesty, good blood, intelligence, has lost much of its prestige. Money takes the place of these today. The dollar is increasing in prestige. Bad temper, lack of refinement, absence of character, all unlovely traits, are covered by that which money brings. Have you not seen this in your community? Have you not known families who enjoyed the lead in the community who, if their money had been taken from them, would have had no influence at all? This is proof that money is an idol of our day—a modern idol.

3. The love of amusement is a modern idol that should be overthrown. We are growing wild upon the subject of amusements. Not only upon the six days of labor in the week, but upon the Lord's day, our people crowd the play hall and the park. The plea of a need of rest is fallaciously made. The poor man, the clerk, the factory hand, all such, can lawfully plead rest and even diversion by spending a large part of the day outside, but it remains to be shown how a man's tired body needs the spectacle of a bull fight, a boxing match, a ball game, a farce comedy. See the difference?

4. What shall we do with these and other modern idols? There is but one thing to do: overthrow them. How overthrow them? Why, put a beam under them and put all our weight upon the other end and upset them—everybody at it, every idol over. That must be our motto.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I ever overthrown an idol in the name of the Lord?

PURITY OF LIFE.

"Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works."—Titus 1:14.

The distinctive note of the Bible is purity and righteousness. Whether one consults the Old Testament or the New, he will find both prophet and apostle denouncing iniquity and pleading for righteousness in conduct and character. In Psalm 5 it is said:

"For Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, Evil shall not sojourn with Thee.

The arrogant shall not stand in Thy sight:

Thou hatest all workers of iniquity.

Thou shalt destroy them that speak lies:

The Lord abhorreth the bloodthirsty and deceitful man" (vs. 4-6).

This is the universal testimony of inspired writers, in both the Old and New Testaments. Our God is righteous and holy, and he demands righteousness and holiness in men.

Purpose of Christ's Mission. It is declared, in the passage which is the text of our study, that Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity," etc. What men needed in order to purity of conduct and life, was purity of heart—the cleansing of the very fountains of our thoughts and actions. This the law could not accomplish. Law is powerless to impart life. What the world needed was to have life, and that more abundantly. This it was Christ's mission to the earth to impart to men (Rom. 8:3).

The Price of our Redemption. Christ "gave himself for us." How much that means! It means, first of all, that he must divest himself of the glory which he had with the Father and clothe himself in human form, and be "found in fashion as a man," that he might live the divine life under human conditions, thus entering into fullest sympathy with all our temptations and trials. It means, too, that he must die, "the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." "It pleased God to lay on him the iniquity of us all, and by his stripes we are healed." This revelation of God's love for us, manifested in Christ's death in our behalf, is designed to awaken in us a sense of God's love and of our sinfulness, and thus to bring us to repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, and to newness of life through him.

We are not our own. Jesus Christ "gave himself for us" that he might "purify unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works." We are Christ's. To him we owe our love, our allegiance, our service, our all. How can we then live impure and unrighteous lives, when the very purpose of his sacrifice for us was to cleanse us from all unrighteousness, that he might have a people purified and ennobled in character and life, zealously devoted to good works? It is not enough to be pure. We must also be fruitful in every good word and work. It is only as we are fruitful that we can glorify God. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit: and so shall ye be my disciples" (John 15:8). Let us put these questions, then, to our own hearts: Are we pure in heart and in life? Are we zealous in good works? If not, the end of Christ's death has not been realized in us.

Prayer. Oh, God, our holy and righteous Father, we thank Thee that Thou hast called us to be Thy children, and that Thou didst send Thy Son into the world to redeem us from all iniquity, and purify us, that we may be Thy peculiar possession, doing Thy will and glorifying Thy name on the earth. Wilt Thou help us to realize the end for which we have been redeemed, and through the strength of Christ, to put away all iniquity from our lives, and to abound in good works unto the praise of Thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Our Budget

—J. W. Wiseman has resigned at Schaller, Iowa.

—Pontiac, Ill., has had 38 accessions in the meeting just closed.

—The Presbyterians will try to raise $12,000,000 as their thank offering.

—J. D. Hall reports 100 additions within nine months at Parkersburg, W. Va.

—The Pan-Presbyterian Alliance convened in Liverpool, England, June 28.

—A. T. Wright paid a visit to Apple Grove, Iowa, and raised in three days money to meet all their debt.

—The City Temple congregation, London, is to build a memorial church in honor of its late pastor, Joseph Parker.

—The church at Mitchellville, Iowa, where A. T. Wright ministers, raised $100 to be portioned out to our various societies.

—A. W. Jones' meeting at Mena, Ark., brought 59 additions to the church. At his previous meeting here he had 64 additions.

—W. S. Hoke accepted a call to What Cheer and Thornburg, Keokuk county, Iowa, and began work June 19. Brainard is now vacant.

—Dr. Herbert L. Willett, who has just returned from an extended tour in Palestine, addressed the final meeting of the Chicago ministerial association.

—Charles Reign Scoville's recent evangelistic efforts have brought over eleven hundred additions to the different churches where he has been holding meetings.

—W. J. Russell, pastor of the East End Christian church, Pittsburg, Pa., recently delivered the annual memorial address to 800 Knights of Pythias of that city.

—The outlook for the work at the West End church, Chicago, which Bro. F. F. Grim, of the Christian Century has undertaken, is encouraging. A Bible-school has just been organized.

—The increase in the number of contributing schools on children's day is no less gratifying than the amount received for heathen missions. It will be entirely in order for any school to send an offering any time in June or July.

—Dr. John S. Paton, now nearly 80 years old, has been making a tour of the churches in Victoria, Australia, in the interest of his mission in the New Hebrides, where he has spent most of his life. He expects to go back and end his days amongst his people.

—Z. P. Schooling, student in the Bible college of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo., secured a handsome missionary offering from a church that had not previously contributed. Brother Lhamon reported all the Bible college students as enthusiastic missionary men.

—A gift of 160 acres of land in Colorado has just been made to the foreign society by a friend of missions in St. Joseph, Mo. The society will no doubt gladly accept many such gifts. A few more such contributions will insure the $250,000 wanted before September 30.

—Members of our congregations in the west who know of Disciples in Boston, can help very much by sending the names of such to the pastor of the church, A. L. Ward, 40 Munroe St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass. Brother Ward is encouraged in his new field of work.

—We were glad to meet and shake the hand of J. C. Creel at our state convention. His health is entirely restored and he manifests his former vigor and earnestness in the cause of Christ. Any church that may need a protracted meeting in July or August by a strong gospel preacher would do well to write him at once at Plattsburg, Mo.

—I congratulate and thank Brother Garrison for his address on 'The Religious Press and the Liquor Problem' in the last number. It expresses my sentiments exactly. I want also to express my sympathy with Bro. D. R. Dungan and family in their bereavement of a wife and mother. She has gone to the reward she so justly deserved.

Sheldon, Mo. "H. E. CARPENTER."

—Bro. A. R. Teachout, who recently sent $1,000 to the church extension fund, and his father have each just given $500 toward the Bible college in India. About ten other such gifts will insure the $25,000 needed. G. L. Wharton will return to India in September, and he is anxious to have the whole amount secured before he starts. Send special gifts for this enterprise to F. M. Rains, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

—The churches of greater New York enjoy the most splendid fellowship. Recently J. P. Lichtenberger has exchanged pulpits with B. Q. Denham of the First church, Manhattan, M. E. Harlan, of the Sterling place church, Brooklyn, and S. T. Willis, of the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street church, Bronx. Such pulpit exchanges are profitable to pastors and people, developing as they must the feeling of brotherhood.

—A debate has been arranged to take place at Middletown, Mo., August 23, 24 and 25, between Bro. J. J. Lockhart and J. R. Patton, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister. It will cover the question of baptism and the Holy Spirit. We shall give further particulars later. These brethren would do far more good to unite in a meeting to convert sinners, preaching alternately, and each presenting the gospel lovingly as he understands it.

—The church at Carthage, Mo., has been struggling with a heavy debt for twenty years. Since J. T. McGarvey has become their minister the debt has been paid, the church greatly improved, $1,100 has been accumulated as a building fund, and the growth in members and the spiritual temperature has been even greater than these material gains would indicate. Surely the Carthage church should feel happy in the good work of our young brother.

—The steamship "Korea," sailing from San Francisco September 21, will probably have aboard fifteen missionaries of our foreign society bound for the far east. This is the largest number of missionaries of this society to sail for the heathen field at any one time before. Some ten of the number go out for their first term. The churches in and about San Francisco will probably tender them a farewell reception. And the church in Honolulu will give them a hearty greeting during the twelve hours' stop.

—We had a very pleasant call from Dr. John N. Prestridge, editor of the Baptist Argus, Louisville, Ky., during his visit to St. Louis and the World's Fair last week. He had called at the Disciples' building at the World's Fair, received a very hearty greeting from the hostess and brought from her a letter of introduction to us. We have not enjoyed the privilege of an exchange with the Argus heretofore, but we shall hereafter. We are much pleased with the spirit of Dr. Prestridge, and the editorial elsewhere was suggested by our conversation.

—The American Christian missionary society asks for the hearty support of our entire brotherhood in its endeavor to raise $200,000 for home missions. Churches that have not taken the offering are urged to do so next Lord's day, July 3. This is just before the Fourth, and is a fine opportunity to emphasize patriotism and love of country to such an extent that there may be an earnest desire to win her for our King. Appeals from all parts of our country are constantly being received at the home office, many of which lie unanswered because of lack of funds. Remit promptly the amount of your offering.

—We give much space this week to the report of the Missouri Christian missionary convention. We believe these conventions to be of great value to the cause, but since only a limited number of the brethren can attend them, we feel it our duty to give the important features of the convention to our readers, and we ask them in return to give a careful reading to the report contained in this issue. We need a deeper and more intelligent interest on the part of our membership in Missouri in the general interests of the state and of the brotherhood, and it is with a view of cultivating such interest that we give so much space to the work of the convention.

—James T. Nichols, of Vinton, Iowa, writing in the Christian Union of a visit to St. Louis and to the World's Fair, says: "It is a remarkable fact that the Disciples of Christ are the only great body of religious people who are represented with a building. Our building, too, is a better one than I expected to find. What an advertisement it is to a great people! Influences will be set in motion by this inexpensive building and the literature circulated from it, that will advertise the Christian church more than a hundred times as much spent in any other way." The hostess was in our office yesterday and reported that during the day preceding she thought at least one thousand people must have passed through the building, asking questions and receiving such information as the attendants could give. And yet in spite of these facts which speak so eloquently of the value of such a building, we are yet short by a few hundred dollars of the amount necessary to pay for it. Those who visit the building may make pledges or hand their checks to Miss Gowan, the hostess, or, if paying cash, may place their contributions in the boxes which are to be found in the building to receive the free-will offerings of visitors to pay for the cost of maintenance and for the free distribution of tracts.

Our World's Fair Pavilion.

Now that the exhibits are nearly all in place, making a fine showing of our missionary, educational and benevolent work, and a throng of visitors from all parts of the world is daily passing through it, asking questions and receiving information, there remains no vestige of doubt, if any ever existed, of the wisdom and value of this enterprise. As one of our prominent business men stood with us in the rotunda of the building, a few days ago, looking at the busy scene of visitors and noting the exhibits, he asked about the indebtedness, and when we told him, he remarked that if the brethren could only know what an opportunity this was they would not delay sending in the money, not only to pay for the building, but to equip it better in the way of accommodations for the public. "But," he added, "I did not myself appreciate the value of it until now, and I will send you a check." Because he saw, he believed. "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

The first and most imperative thing is for those who have pledged definite amounts as their own offering, or have pledged to raise certain amounts, and have not redeemed these pledges, to report to us at once, either remitting the money or stating their inability to give or to raise the amount. Then we will know where we are. There is an indebtedness on the building itself of nearly $800. There are pledges out amounting to over $700. How much of these we can rely upon is not known, but there is likely to be a shortage of at least one-third of the amount due. Even if it should all be paid, there is a continuous expense of keeping up the building, furnishing free tracts for distribution, stationery, water, etc., for visitors, which will require additional contributions. We are exceedingly anxious to close up the building account at once, and we appeal to the public spirit and the Christian zeal of the brotherhood to assist us in this matter.

The amount previously acknowledged is..... $3,271 58
Amounts received since are as follows:

Pres. J. Hopwood, Lynchburg, Va. . . . .	5 00
J. R. Perkins, Huntsville, Mo. . . . .	1 00
J. E. Decker, Lafontaine, Kan. . . . .	50
Christian Publishing Co. [additional] . . . . .	25 00

Making the total amt't received.... $3,303 08

News From Many Fields

Our Western Letter.

Colorado is all right! Do not judge the state by the little commotion in Cripple Creek and other mining camps. The great body of our people are tillers of the soil—honest, intelligent, thrifty. The towns are composed of the best character of men and women. Let me tell you something of interest.

There is a man in Denver who had a most extraordinary experience in a recent municipal election.

B. B. Lindsey was a candidate for an important judicial position. The number of votes cast was about 55,000. Mr. Lindsey's opponent received less than 1,000 votes. Mr. Lindsey's majority, therefore, in a vote of 55,000 was 54,000. How was this extraordinary result secured? CHARACTER DID IT.

To begin with, B. B. Lindsey is, personally, a good man. He is not a trickster. He is not a mere politician. He is not a wire worker. He does not play to the galleries. He is not a demagogue. He is genuine. He is a good man. He is a Christian gentleman. The people believe in him. Some men are Christians for revenue. B. B. Lindsey does not belong to this class. He is not even suspected. The people think they know him, and knowing him, they believe in him and vote for him. His election was a compliment to the voters of Denver.

In his decisions Judge Lindsey mixes gospel with law. While he is just, he is gentle. He is a firm believer in the Christ spirit and in its practicability. The gracious spirit of the Nazarene is good for the court room as well as for the sick chamber and the consecrated edifice.

But that which especially commends this man to the people and makes him popular, is his interest in and work for boys. He studies to understand the boy who is brought before him. The boys have come to know that they have the sympathy of "the Judge." They know, too, that if their spirit is incorrigible he will punish them. There is no maudlin sentimentality in the person of whom I write.

He uses his official position to compel fathers and mothers to do their duty toward their children. More than once he has fined or sent to jail, or both, on account of a neglect to discharge parental duties. This can be done under the statutes of Colorado. He sometimes pronounces sentence against boys; but he believes in the potency of the law of kindness in saving even bad boys from lives of criminality. And there is reason for this faith. It grows with experience and observation. James Whitcomb Riley is credited with the following:

"Pears to me all children's good
Ef they're only understood,
Even the bad ones, seems to me,
Is jest as good as they kin be."

This is Judge Lindsey's conviction. Here is how we do things in Colorado:

If a boy drinks or goes to a saloon, we bring in the parent who sent him there and the barkeeper and the proprietor who let him have the liquor, and fine them. Fourteen parents have been in jail under this law during the last six months, for short terms. It is found that three days is as good as three months. If a child is loafing on the railroad tracks, we bring in the parent for contributing to its delinquency. There is hardly a conceivable fault of a child for which the parents cannot be held under our law, and it is believed to be the only law of the kind in the United States.

I am sure you will be interested in the verbiage of the law to which reference is made. The following is quoted:

"The words 'delinquent child' shall include any child sixteen years of age or under such age who violates any law of this state or any city or village ordinance; or who is incorrigible; or who knowingly associates with thieves, vicious or immoral persons; or who is growing up in idleness or crime; or who knowingly visits or enters a house of ill repute; or who knowingly patronizes or visits any policy shop or place where any gaming device is or shall be operated; or who patronizes or visits any saloon or dram shop where intoxicating liquors are sold; or who patronizes or visits any public pool room or bucket shop; or who wanders about the streets in the night time without being on any lawful business or occupation; or who habitually wanders about any railroad yards or tracks, or jumps or holds on to any moving train; or who habitually uses vile, obscene, vulgar, profane, or indecent, language, or is guilty of immoral conduct in any public place or about any school house."

This is one definition of juvenile delinquency. How do you like it? How about its enforcement?

By a special act of the legislature of Colorado it is provided that:

"In all cases where any child shall be a delinquent child or a juvenile delinquent person, as defined by the statute of this state, the parent or parents, legal guardian, or person having the custody of such child, or any other person responsible for, or by any act encouraging, causing or contributing to the delinquency of such child, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not to exceed one thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail, for a period not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment. The court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under this act, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court, the sentence imposed may be suspended."

I have copied the foregoing because it is believed that there is no law like it in any state of the republic outside of Colorado. It is understood that Judge B. B. Lindsey, more than any other person, is responsible for this law. He has been charged with its enforcement; and he enforces it.

Commenting on this law, Judge Lindsey says:

"It is hard to conceive a law holding parents and others more strictly accountable for the moral welfare of children. A father's duty to his children does not end when he has provided something to eat and a place to sleep. This is not all that constitutes a home, even if some fathers appear to think so. We have already had to send some fathers to jail because they had that notion. Quite a number of parents have actually been in jail under this new law, and a number have had to pay fines. If parents will not protect the child the law must, as far as possible, compel them to do so."

The peculiarity of this law is that it looks to the moral welfare of the child, and not to its physical well being only. This is the peculiarity. Another peculiarity, I believe, is in the following, printed above in italics, namely:

"The court may impose conditions upon any person found guilty under this act, and so long as such person shall comply therewith to the satisfaction of the court, the sentence imposed may be suspended."

Colorado is all right! For one thing, we propose to bring up our children in the right way.

A NOTRE DAME LADY'S APPEAL.

To all knowing sufferers of rheumatism, whether muscular or of the joints, sciatica, lumbagos, backache, pains in the kidneys or neuralgia pains, to write to her for a home treatment which has repeatedly cured all of these tortures. She feels it her duty to send it to all sufferers FREE. You cure yourself at home as thousands will testify—no change of climate being necessary. This simple discovery banishes uric acid from the blood, loosens the stiffened joints, purifies the blood, and brightens the eyes, giving elasticity and tone to the whole system. If the above interests you, for proof address Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind.

Northern California.

A. C. McKeener, our state president, has been at work again in a meeting for the Dinuba church, with 25 added. This makes the third meeting during ten months that the pastor of our largest church and president of our state board has found time to hold for other churches, besides one in his home church. Suppose all our pastors had done likewise, what a report we could have rolled up, with 300 meetings during the year! We shall begin to appreciate such work some day.

Mrs. Clara Hazelrigg, for five months one of our state evangelists, held six meetings, and added 186 to our California brotherhood as a result of her visit. We are very much pleased over her work. It has been a great blessing to us.

R. L. McHatton just closed a splendid meeting at Gilroy.

E. W. Darst, of Berkeley, preached 10 days at Woodland to the delight of that people; a few added.

This is the season of the year when it gets hot in the great valleys, and as the mercury goes up, religion seems to go down. Yet the board purchased a new tent capable of seating over 300 people, and have our team of evangelists, Platt and Honn, down at Portersville, and they are getting a good hearing with audiences increasing nightly.

Several pulpit changes will occur about state meeting time. It seems impossible to prevent this, and we hope it will be for the best.

Several things will be as a novelty at our state meeting this year:

1. We will have many new preachers among us, and no preacher will speak twice.

2. We have adopted Thursday, July 21, as missionary day, when we make a special rally and hear from representatives of all our national boards. Don't miss this.

3. The ministerial association will take up the subject of church discipline, and for two days we shall have papers by a large number of our best, most scholarly and safest men, to be followed by a full and free discussion. We wish every elder and deacon in the state could be present, as well as every preacher. It will be a time-marking epoch.

Then we have already added 700 to the churches as the work of this board this year, and have already raised over $3,400 for state missions. Help us make it $4,000.

Remember the convention dates, July 18-31. We have wired the tabernacle for lights, put in stoves to make it comfortable, and are building some cement sidewalks. It may sound strange to talk about stoves in July, but they will add comfort at Santa Cruz. Please note our change of address now.

Pullman, Washington.

I visited Pullman, Wash., June 11-13 to preach the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class of the Washington state agricultural college and school of science. This institution has grown in a little over ten years to a plant worth some $400,000 and an enrollment of 655 students. But few institutions have a better executive head than President E. A. Bryan. Especially was I delighted to find him interested to an unusual degree in the religious welfare of the student body. He believes the churches of Pullman have a splendid opportunity to plant truth in the young men and women that will be far reaching in its effects. He found real pleasure in telling of a Mr. Tannet, an electrical and mechanical engineer, who graduated several years ago and went to the Hawaiian islands as head engineer for one of the large plantations. Not finding a Sunday-school on the plantation he started one. It was my pleasure to know Mr. Tannet while I was in Honolulu. It is refreshing to find the head of so large an institution of growing importance and strength so vitally interested in the moral and spiritual well being of the students. He spoke of the farsightedness of our people in planting Bible-chair work in connection with various institutions, and urged that it was wisdom to keep strong men in the pulpits of a college town.

And this opens the way for not the least important thing I want to say, namely, that Bro. Ralph C. Sargent, the pastor of our church at Pullman, has already in his eight months' stay gotten a strong hold on his church and community, and especially the student body. Our people are building a $10,000 church which will be the finest and largest in the town. Their present building is entirely too small. I predict that when our church gets into its new meeting house Brother Sargent will have the largest audiences in Pullman. R. Kent Beattie, son of J. A. Beattie, is professor of botany, and one of Brother Sargent's right-hand men. Indeed, so active is Brother Beattie that he impresses one as being not only a right-hand man, but rather an all-round-hand man.

Pullman is in the Palouse country, one of the richest wheat countries in the world, and is a beautiful little town of 2,500. The college, of course, is a fixture there and the town will grow considerably larger. It was a matter of much gratification to find our pastor and church in this college town so wide awake to their opportunities.

Portland, Oregon.

Illinois Notes.

Blandinsville is one of the old strong churches in the west part of the state. It largely grew out of the old Bedford church, the mother church of that section. It has about 200 members and a live Sunday-school of 120. The prayer-meeting is generally attended by about 50 people. The C. E. numbers 37, also a Junior C. E. of 40 members. Bro. E. B. Rickey, the new minister, is getting hold of the work well and a larger and grander public spirit seems to be entering the church.

In Scioto we have a good little band, which by wise and spiritual leadership might grow into a strong church. But little preaching has been supported for the past year, but a better day seems to be dawning for the faithful few.

Bro. I. R. Spencer with the wisdom and knowledge of a 40 years' ministry is leading the faithful little church at Aurora to useful service, and to the development of spiritual power. A good house of worship and a good live Sunday-school adds influence and usefulness.

The church at Streator has had many struggles and misfortunes, but the indomitable spirit perseveres and meets all difficulties with a faith and courage worthy of the cause they represent. They meet regularly and hope soon to have a settled minister. The Christian home is well located and with a new house the cause is well assured.

The Clinton church has a strong, active, intelligent membership of 318, and about one hundred more that do not mean much in the kingdom of God. It also has a Sunday school which numbers 250 enrolled, also other useful auxiliaries. E. A. Gilliland has been the pastor for seven years and is doing a splendid work. He is a hard student, a faithful pastor and a solid builder. A new house of worship is possibly the next great effort of the church.

Payson was long the home of our valuable, venerable Caleb Edwards. Bro. Walter Cline now ministers to the people. He is just out of college and gives promise of usefulness. There are about 150 members, Sunday-school of 100 and Christian Endeavor of 31.

The church at Quincy was organized about 1850. Some of our strongest men have been its ministers. Alexander Campbell honored it with a visit. It numbers some 500 members, with a Sunday-school of 300. Its children's day exercises were of a high order. Its Christian Endeavor is strong and active. Bro. W. M. Jordan has lately become pastor of the church, which is delighted with his ministry.

The church supports a mission in the east part of the city. Bro. W. N. Brown is the efficient superintendent.

Literberry church numbers less than 100 members, and has a Sunday-school of more members than the church has. The Endeavor is active and the young people enterprising. The church has recently expended about $2,000 on its house of worship, and has one of the best arranged and most beautiful little buildings in central Illinois. H. G. Van Dervort, of Clayton, preaches for the church.

The church at Tuscola numbers about 250 members and was organized by David Walk forty years ago. The large, live Sunday-school is very prosperous. J. T. Davis is the loved young pastor, and the beautiful peace and harmony of the church give promise of a good growth in all departments of Christian effort. Mrs. Julia Graham is the patriarch of the church, having obeyed the gospel under the preaching of A. Campbell at Somerset, Pa. Her spirit is bright and her life a benediction to the church. Does the church honor the old veterans in Israel as it ought? How beautifully do their gray hairs adorn the congregations of the righteous. These fade away like the stars of the morning and go out into the larger light of the great day. Gently lead their tottering steps and cheer their declining years.

The Progress of Our Cause in the Gulf City.

The writer has entered on the second year of service as missionary pastor in Mobile. During the year just closed but little has been said as to our progress, and only occasional reports of additions have been sent to any of our papers.

Mobile is one of the largest cities on the gulf coast, and her growth is perhaps more marked than any city in the entire south. We have now a population of about sixty thousand. Last year the increase in population was greater than any year in all her history, which extends back nearly 200 years. Mobile is an old city, but the certainty of the canal's being opened, the awakening which is general throughout the south, the deepening by the government of the channel of Mobile bay, all have conspired to awaken new life and energy. Population from the middle and northern states is pouring in. The city is experiencing a new birth. Many predict a population of 100,000 within the next decade. The first attempt was made to organize a Christian church in Mobile many years ago when James H. Allen, now of St. Louis, was a resident of this city. He hired a hall and a preacher. A meeting was held, but no organization resulted.

Three years ago the Board of church extension came on the ground and purchased a corner lot on Government street, which is the residence street of Mobile, wide, beautiful and occupied by handsome residences. This lot cost $4,000, and was secured at a great bargain. It would bring $6,000 on the open market to-day. It is centrally located and is ideal for a church site. The few members erected a cheap tabernacle on this lot and conducted a Sunday-school. They were few but very faithful. They were not able to support a preacher. In February, 1903, the American Christian missionary society made an appropriation for this work, and in June the writer came and began work. The Sunday-school was reorganized with eleven members. In one year we have grown to one hundred. By making a thorough canvass we could find forty nine persons, old and young, members of the church, who were willing to go to work. During the year this number has increased to 117. A good proportion were by baptism. Hardly a Sunday passes without additions to the church. We have outgrown the chapel and are now crowded for room, especially in our Sunday-school. In addition to our work in the city we have operated a mission at Orchard, a suburban town on the M. J. & K. C. railroad, and several have been baptized there. It will eventually grow into a church. We are greatly in need of a suitable house of worship. Our little chapel is surrounded by beautiful churches and residences. We are compelled to go elsewhere to baptize our people. The chapel looks odd and queer and is too small for our work. Two months ago we began to raise money for a new church. We have now in cash and pledges about $3,000. The church is poor, but all are making great sacrifices. The citizens generally are helping us. One man, not a member of any church, has given $100. Others have done almost as well. We are beginning to be understood and have won the respect of the entire city. The other religious bodies are most cordial and sympathetic. The writer was elected president of the Protestant ministers' association Jan. 1. I have frequently addressed large audiences in other churches. Each alternate Wednesday, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., I speak to large bodies of men in the L. & N. railroad shops. These meetings are very profitable. In February I was invited to address the students of the medical college, University of Alabama; also the graduating class of the Mobile business college. These things indicate recognition on the part of the general public. The outlook is fine. We have a splendid opportunity here. With a good house our cause would press to the front rapidly. John T. Vawter, of Indianapolis, has given $100 to our building, as has James H. Allen, of St. Louis. These brethren know Mobile and the need of a strong church. We hope to begin our building by Nov. 1. Whether we shall be able to do so or not depends on how much help we receive from the brotherhood. Except one, it is 160 miles to the nearest self-supporting church. We are in a great and growing city, surrounded by a great territory destitute of our teaching. The cause here is worthy of help. We closed out the year with all bills paid and $300 in the treasury, which was made a part of the building fund. There were five confessions last Sunday morning. Thus we begin the new year. If you want to do the cause of Christ a real service, send us an offering for our new church.

Mobile, Alabama. CLAUDE E. HILL.

Foreign Society Notes.

Sunday, June 12, was children's day in the first Sunday-school at St. Joseph, Mo. The whole offering was nearly $800. C. M. Chilton's class raised $170; another class raised $87. One little girl raised $29. The superintendent is Jas. M. Irvine. This church and school supports F. E. Meigs, president of Drake college, Nankin, China. This Sunday-school is already planning for children's day in 1905. Is it not time a larger number of our Sunday-schools were planning for greater things for heathen missions? St. Joseph, Mo., has set a good example to all Missouri, and indeed to the whole brotherhood.

The reports from children's day are encouraging. For the first twenty-one days of June there was an increase in the receipts of $5,603.90 over the same period of last year. If this rate of increase continues the amount asked for from the Sunday-schools will be received. It is hoped that the superintendents and treasurers will see that the offerings made are promptly forwarded.

The churches that have not yet sent in their offerings for foreign missions should do so without unnecessary delay. Every year offerings are taken that never reach the mission rooms. Through neglect on the part of someone the money is put into the general treasury or it is taken and used for some other purpose. Money given for foreign missions should be regarded as a sacred trust. It should be used in accordance with the intentions of the donors.

Southwest Missouri Notes.

A. J. Williams, late evangelist of the Springfield district, has accepted a call from the church at Aurora, Mo., where he is doing a fine work. This leaves the district without an evangelist at present.

R. B. Havener has lately held a good meeting at Smithfield, while Joseph Gaylor revived the work at Carl Junction near by. Both places need a pastor.

F. L. Moore, late of Republic, Mo., is now in our neighbor city of Galena, Kan. He followed the union meeting conducted by W. E. Harlow, and reports additions constantly.

Webb City church is waiting for the coming of Brother Boggess, who has just graduated at Lexington, Ky., to succeed E. M. Barney.

Brother Deatheridge and the church at Monett are rejoicing in a fruitful meeting, being assisted by Brother Haner, of Kansas.

D. W. Moore, pastor of South street church, Springfield, was expected from Europe in time to preach last Sunday. First church of the same city is still without a preacher.

Evangelist W. E. Harlow is taking his vacation at home during June and July.

South Joplin church flourishes under the leadership of J. M. Baker. They have the second largest Bible-school in the city, have their debt pledged and are receiving additions constantly. A new church is being talked of already.

At the First church this city on May 29 Mr. Chas. E. Robinson was ordained to the work of the ministry. He was a member of the 20th Kansas in the Philippines. After his return he was graduated from the Joplin high school. Since then he has attended the Missouri Bible college at Columbia, where he is also taking work in the state university. He is already an acceptable preacher. He is a noble young man who will do valuable service in the church.

Do You Suffer From Hay-Fever or Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an assured cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. Most marvelous cures are wrought by this new plant, when all other remedies fail. It is really a most wonderful discovery. Hay-Fever sufferers should use the Kola Compound before the season of attacks when practical to give it time to act on the system.

Mr. J. B. Ayle, Estherville, Iowa, writes Feb. 28th, was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma after 28 years' suffering, could get nothing to even give relief. Miss Eva Preston, Petersburg, Ind., writes March 8th, suffered beyond words for 18 years with Hay-Fever and Asthma until cured by the Kola Compound. Physicians told her she could not be cured. Rev. S. H. Elsenberg, Ph. D., Centre Hall, Pa., a very bad case was permanently cured of Asthma after many years' suffering.

To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 1168 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who suffers from any form of Hay-Fever or Asthma. This is very fair, and we advise sufferers to send for a case. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Commencement at Butler College.

By W. O. Moore.

This institution has closed another year, which means much work well done. A class consisting of twelve graduates and four post-graduates goes out from its halls to make its impress upon the world. These graduates, as well as all other graduates who go out from the schools of the Christian church, should be especially strong in knowledge and in intellectual and moral power. They should have clear conceptions of God and of duty. Those that graduate from Butler college have had advantages by which they can "measure up" to a nobler Christian service and be bright lights in the church and to the world. Young men who desire to become preachers of the gospel will find at Butler college the help and training that is suited to equip them for this high calling. Young men and ladies who desire to become teachers will here find an institution that is comprehensive in courses of study and one that is especially strong in its teachers. They here can get the preparation that will fit them for grand achievements in this high calling.

There are many young men who are religious who do not contemplate becoming preachers of the gospel as the expression is usually understood. They expect to be teachers in our public schools, or lawyers, or physicians, or mechanics, or farmers, or office men, or something else that is noble. They should attend Butler college or some other one of our schools. It may be asked, why? For divers reasons. One of these reasons we will now indicate. There is a disposition to form in our Sunday-schools what is termed business men's Bible-classes. That is, classes composed of men. This work is growing in Indianapolis. There is a demand for strong and competent men to conduct these classes. Young men of the church should attend Butler college and avail themselves of what it affords in Bible instruction that they may be fitted to be teachers of these classes. It is a grand and blessed work.

There is a lawyer in Indianapolis who has a class of over one hundred men. This class he conducts not by asking questions and receiving answers. He prepares himself with great care so that he may handle the lesson as he should. The points of the lesson are presented clearly and fully. There is a men's class in the Third Christian church that is conducted in this way and is well attended. Other churches of the city have these classes and are succeeding well. Young men who think of being business men, as that is generally understood, but who are anxious to do a grand work for Christ, should prepare themselves to be leaders of men in Bible-class work. Butler college affords splendid facilities for such preparation.

Brother Garrison is giving promise by his manner and labors of fitness for the presidency of Butler college. The brethren of Indianapolis and all who know him are well pleased with him. May he succeed as he would like to. He can if he has the co-operation of the preachers and the churches. Young men should write him. He will be delighted to answer all correspondence pertaining to school work.

It is intimated that Butler college has prospects by way of endowment that will insure her in making hopeful announcements in the near future. May this all be true.

Parents who desire to see the church prosper should send their sons and daughters, if possible, to the school that will equip them for blessed service in the kingdom of God's dear Son.

The church not only needs money by which to carry on its work, but it needs men and women of knowledge and spiritual culture. Our colleges help the churches. That is the primary object of their existence. The churches will find it to their advantage to be in sympathy and co-operation with our colleges.

We trust that the coming year of Butler college will be a very prosperous one.

Georgia.

A. B. Reeves, the beloved pastor at Athens, has resigned to accept work at Paris, Tenn. He has been state secretary of our Georgia board of missions for two years, and has done a splendid work at Athens. We are loth to give him up. Athens is an educational center. The university of Georgia, the state normal school and Lucy Cobb female institute are all located there.

Our genial and indefatigable editor, E. L. Shelnutt, spent several days with Bert White at Anniston, Ala., last week. These brethren rank high among our ministers of the south, but like other worthy ministers they are too liberal in their interpretation of Paul's dissertations on bachelorhood. Perhaps this conference, after long and close research, will prove a happy augury of better application.

T. L. Adams, Georgia's Chrysostom, gave his new lecture to an appreciative audience at Acworth last week.

P. H. Mears, of Monroe, is assisting V. P. Bowers in a meeting at Guyton.

Our peerless champion of primitive Christianity, W. J. Cocke, is bombarding the forts of sectarianism at Dublin.

The dauntless O. P. Spiegel, America's missionary for the south, is besieging the citadel of sin, with the co-operation of his brother, J. E. Spiegel, at Sandersville. The rich legacy bequeathed to the great cause by the elderly Spiegel in the persons of his three sons, O. P., J. E. and S. P., all of whom are princely preachers, is the most enduring monument that mortal man could build to his memory. When the pyramids of Egypt, the monuments of the Napoleons and the Washingtons shall have crumbled into dust, these living spiritual stones, with a rich harvest of golden sheaves, will glow, glint and blaze forever. If more fathers and mothers would dedicate their children to the service of the Master instead of to commercial pursuits for worldly gain, the vision of the Patmean seer would soon be realized.

The veteran J. S. Lamar, our Addison, has moved back to Turnerville, where he can revel in the invigorating ozone from the mountains during the sultry summer months. As the day of life grows old and they ascend the mountain heights of God's eternal promises, may the conscious joy of refreshing breezes from yonder shore waft back their songs of triumph, while their spiritual vision expands until bound only by the effulgent glory of perpetual bliss.

Without doubt Georgia is destined to take her place in the front rank of southern statehood. Her strides in developing her undeveloped material resources are marvelous. There is an undertone current indication of a great religious upheaval in the not far distant future. Stereotyped, threadbare, antiquated methods are proving painfully inadequate. ## Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

E. B. Bagby, the ever busy preacher of Ninth street, and our state president, will take his summer vacation with his family at San Mar, a farm house near Beaver Creek. He will rest by preaching a Sunday each for Beaver Creek and Hagerstown, exchanging with Brethren Hoyer and Kendrick. Our Sunday-school at Waynesboro held children's day service last Lord's day at 10:45 A. M. It was their first. About $3 was secured for foreign missions. We are a mission school, but missionaries.

In the afternoon I delivered my illustrated sermon on "The Two Ways," from Matt. 5:13, 14, at the union Sunday-school at Ringgold, three miles from Waynesboro. There are some noble Disciples there, and they have preaching once a month by W. S. Hoyer or the writer. We are beginning to arrange our program for our next state convention, Oct. 5-7, at Martinsburg, W. Va.

The summer season has opened at Pen-Mar Park near here. It is on the line between Maryland and Pennsylvania. Large denominational reunions are held there.

Waynesboro, Pa. J. A. HOPKINS

Indian Territory Notes.

Since our last notes, we have held meetings at Marietta and Marlow, and spent a few days at Wynnewood. In the meeting at Marietta we had 24 additions, and much prejudice was broken down, the kind of prejudice that hinders the work the most of anything in the territory—the opposition to instrumental music and all co-operative work in spreading the gospel. This is giving away, however, in many places to more liberal thought, and I am sure in the Chickasaw nation we will soon be where we will not feel it very greatly; and this is true not only of the Chickasaw nation but of the whole territory. It has been the one thing that has hindered the rapid growth of the church in this part of the country.

At Marlow we had a good meeting; that is, what we call a good meeting, for the work we have to do in this part of the country is almost as hard as that on a foreign field. We had 26 additions, and the church was strengthened. At Marietta we have no house of our own, but hope to have one in the near future. At Marlow we have a good house. Both of these are good towns, with splendid country around them. Wynnewood will some day be one of the best towns in the territory; it is located in the Washita valley, one of the richest in the world. Brethren coming to the territory will do well to watch these "notes" and others writing from the territory, and if they come to this country it will do much to locate them where they can go at once to work for the cause of Christ. I shall be glad to do all I can to direct brethren aright who come this way.

Ardmore, I. T.

AN AWFUL SUFFERER.

It is agreed by Medical Authorities in general that Hay-Fever and Asthma are the two most disagreeable and distressing maladies known to Medical Science. The season for the former disease will soon be with us once more and it is but proper to call the attention of sufferers to a Remedy which is known to have proved a remarkable success, as evidenced by the large number of people who advise of their cures after from one to thirty years' suffering, when change of climate or Physicians gave them very little, if any, relief.

This truly remarkable Remedy is a product of Darkest Africa, called the Kola Plant, and is an unerring cure for Hay-Fever and Asthma. All over Europe Physicians are endorsing and prescribing the Kola Plant as a positive Constitutional Cure for these Diseases. So sure are the importers of Kola of the fact that it cannot fail to cure that they are sending out large trial cases, free, to any sufferer of Hay-Fever or Asthma who makes the request.

Address Kola Importing Company, 1160 Broadway, New York, and they will send you a large trial case prepaid by mail. You should surely try it.

Ontario Disciples' Convention.

The annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Ontario, Canada, has just been held at London. The Disciples in Canada number about 15,000, and their growth has been about 15 per cent.

A brief review of the year's work was given by President Tolton. He pointed out that all obligations to mission points had been met and the finances of the home mission board were on a firm basis. The mission opened in Montreal was being successfully carried on in this especially difficult field for Protestant effort. He called for a continued forward movement, and to this end advocated the appointment of a permanent traveling secretary to keep the board in touch with mission points.

A. Tovell, of Guelph, gave the report of the board of managers. It recommended that a special effort be made to raise $1 per member for home missions, and backed up the president's suggestion relative to the appointment of a traveling secretary. This last recommendation evoked a lengthy discussion, but was finally adopted.

The treasurer's report was read by R. L. McKinnon, of Guelph. It showed a small increase in receipts and a probable balance on the right side. The report was adopted.

The report on the Christian Messenger was read by A. T. Campbell. The past year was the first in which the paper had not been published at a loss. A vote of thanks was extended to the retiring editor, Mr. R. Butchart.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President, J. D. Higgins, Toronto; vice president, M. N. Stephens, Glencairn; treasurer, Jno. McKinnon, Guelph; corresponding secretary, Amos Tovell, Guelph; recording secretary, W. C. McDougall, St. Thomas; executive committee, George Gier, Grand Valley; Jas. Tolton, Walkerton; Jas. Lediard, Owen Sound; M. Miller, Selkirk; B. H. Hayden, Bowmanville.

The officers for the Provincial Christian Endeavor are: J. A. Aiken, Toronto, president; Hannah E. McDougall, St. Thomas, secretary, and J. T. Leary, Toronto, treasurer. Executive committee, E. F. Burton, Toronto; Annie McKechnie, Owen Sound; J. P. Reid, Hamilton, and Alice Pierce, Ina.

Mrs. J. Lediard was again elected president of the O. C. W. B. M., with Miss A. Stephens, Glencairn, secretary-treasurer. Mrs. Jury, of Bowmanville, will have full charge of children's work.

After the election of officers the committee on resolutions made its report, which was enthusiastically received. The time and place committee decided to hold the convention next year at Bowmanville. Mr. Culp reported one hundred and twelve delegates from abroad, representing forty different communities.

Some very helpful addresses were given, and among the speakers were Brethren A. McLean and B. L. Smith, from Cincinnati, O.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Additions Reported Last Week.

	June 15	June 22
Baptisms .....	752.....	795
Denominations .....	68 .....	60
Total.....	820.....	855

Harrison, O., June 23. M. L. BUCKLEY.

ARKANSAS.

Pine Bluff.—The work has started off splendidly. God is blessing us. Fine interest is being shown in the midweek service. The spiritual tone of the membership is getting stronger as the need is felt for a more spiritual life. Am making a series of midweek talks on "Paths to Power," looking toward the deepening of our spiritual lives. One addition last Lord's day.—PERCY G. CROSS.

Grannis, June 22.—Preached here June 17, 18 and 19. Three confessions and baptisms. I preach here every third Lord's day. It is a small church with some good workers and a good Sunday-school.—W. O. BREEDEN, De Queen, Ark.

Rogers, June 21.—Our pleasant little meeting at Bentonville closed with 29 accessions in all, 28 by baptism. An appeal by the writer on the last day of the meeting secured nearly $2,500 as a beginning towards a new brick church building.—D. D. BOYLE, Oklahoma City.

Mena, June 24.—Closed our meeting here last Saturday night. Additions 59. Of these 37 were by baptism. One from Methodists already baptized. Two restored and 19 by letter. This is my second meeting here—64 in first. There were 137 additions in our last three meetings.—ARTHUR W. JONES, evangelist, E. M. DOUTHITT, singer.

Fayetteville, June 23.—There were eight additions to the First church this week—three by letter and five conversions.—N. M. RAGLAND.

CALIFORNIA.

Hanford, June 20.—Seven additions recently four by letter, two from the Baptists and one confession.—C. C. BENTLEY, pastor.

CUBA.

Havana, June 20.—Have had 14 accessions since our last report to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, three the past week.—LOWELL C. MCPHERSON, missionary.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, June 24.—Am now in a meeting with Claude C. Jones, of Eighty-fourth street Christian church of this city. Seven added first week—five by baptism, two from Baptists. Last Lord's day H street Christian church gave over $100 for the purpose of helping to build a nice church in the south-eastern portion of this city. Work will be begun at once. The children raised $50 for foreign missions.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

Washington.—The annual report of the Whitney avenue Christian church, Washington, D.C., W. L. Harris pastor, showed 130 sermons preached, 1,456 calls made, 11 weddings and three funerals. Fifty-one have been added to the church, of which number 43 were by baptism. Material gathered for "Kemil memorial hall." The reports last night showed every department of the church in good condition. All expenses paid and some money in the treasury. Large audiences and deep interest.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, June 20.—First church: There were two confessions last night and one added by statement, and there were two confessions June 12.—J. T. BOONE.

ILLINOIS.

Pontiac, June 21.—Thirty one additions here. Monser was the evangelist. McColley is a splendid pastor.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON and WIFE, singers.

Pontiac, June 28.—After a long siege, we closed with victory a meeting resulting in 38 accessions. Harold E. Monser was with us the last half of the meeting. Williamson and wife assisted.—W. G. MCCOLLEY, pastor.

South Chicago, June 20.—Our church has a membership of only 34 or 35, and a Sunday-school attendance of about 40. We met in a lodge hall, which can only be used Sundays. On this account we were at a disadvantage to practice for children's day, but we had a good exercise and raised $9. This was our first children's day, and our members are poor.—C. F. ELLIS.

INDIANA.

Laud, June 20.—Yesterday was children's day. The program was full, the house full, the yard full, and the boxes were full. We surpassed our apportionment by about seventy per cent.—WILLIS N. CUNNINGHAM, Indianapolis, Ind.

IOWA.

Cedar Rapids, June 19.—S. M. Martin, ably assisted by Prof. Wilson, F. J. Stinson and others, has just closed a six weeks' meeting which was a success in its wholesome instruction to the people of this city in every walk of life. The seed he sowed was well harrowed.—W. H. WINSOR.

Cedar Rapids, June 20.—Yesterday was a good day at the Second church. Six splendid additions, five of them heads of families. The work is encouraging.—J. E. DINGER, pastor.

Seymour, June 20.—One added by letter at the morning service yesterday. Mrs. Roos and myself will attend the dedication at Oelwein, June 26.—S. B. ROOS.

KANSAS.

Edna, June 15.—Parksville Sunday-school had children's day June 12. It was our first effort here. The offering for foreign missions was $6.76. We received the compliments of a well filled house for our well rendered program and our beautiful new school house.—MRS. T. W. McCOMB, Sunday school superintendent.

North Topeka, June 20.—One more accession to the church here yesterday by statement. This makes eleven who have taken membership with us since we came in March. The outlook is hopeful.—F. H. BENTLEY.

Burton, June 22.—Held meetings at Kanopolis and organized a New Testament reading circle; preached at Abilene, also at Burton, where I organized a New Testament reading circle, with the assistance of Brother Wright, the pleasant pastor. Am now holding meetings near here. Any point in the south wanting meetings please write me.—THOS J. EAST-ERWOOD.

Mound City, June 20.—Had a good day here yesterday. Four baptized in afternoon. Our work has the promise of success.—G. M. READ.

Winchester, June 20.—At the regular evening service, June 12, there were five baptisms, all of adults.—WM. M. MAYFIELD, pastor.

LOUISIANA.

Alexandria, June 21.—Haddock and Stanley have been bombarding the forts here for six weeks and have organized a church of 50 members and raised about $3,000 to build the church. Brother Haddock is a strong gospel preacher, and Talmage Stanley is one of the finest if not the best cornetist and leader of song in the south.—R. G. HOLENBEAK.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston.—I have just closed my first month with the St. James street church. We have had six additions to the congregation. We are highly pleased with the people. Our children's day exercises were very fine. Work goes more slowly in the east than in the west, but you may expect to hear from us often.—A. L. WARD.

MISSOURI.

Sedalia, June 19.—We had four additions at E. Broadway Christian church to-day. There have been 26 added here since my coming in January. We are just beginning a union meeting here in a tent. Munhall and Pugh are assisting. Eleven churches are co-operating, and two more may assist.—W. F. HAMANN.

Hematite, June 22.—Bro. J. H. Hill and the writer are beginning a meeting here. Three sermons and one confession thus far. Prospects good.—S. W. ROBINSON.

Smithfield, Jasper county, June 19.—Three were added to the church by baptism on last Lord's day.—ELD. H. E. CARPENTER.

Drexel, June 24.—Two additions at Creighton at our meeting first Sunday in June. There was one by confession at Cleveland at our last meeting, June 19.—O. A. ISHMAEL.

Bonne Terre, June 25.—Two additions at my regular appointment last Lord's day.—JNO. G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

NEBRASKA.

Ashland, June 18.—The DeForest Austin and Frank McVey meeting has run its first week with four accessions to the Lord's cause, three by first obedience, one from the Baptists to be a Christian only. We continue. The weather is ideal, and large audiences are reached at each service.—L. AA. HUSSONG.

OHIO.

Cleveland, Cedar avenue, June 22.—One baptism last Lord's day. June 12 was a red letter day. Children's exercises were good. The offering for missions was more than fifty per cent larger than last year. The annual picnic was a great success. We took forty-six orphans, with four attendants, from the Cleveland Christian orphanage with us and gave them a day's outing. The day was fine and the delight of the children was unbounded.—E. P. WISE.

McConnellsville.—Evangelist G. A. Ragan just closed a three weeks' meeting with the state mission church, resulting in 31 additions. A year ago he held a three weeks' meeting at the same point, with 48 additions. The newly organized church is now one of the most prosperous and hopeful of the state missions. A pastor will soon be located. This point is especially important, as it is surrounded with non missionary or anti churches.

Delta, June 18.—W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., closed a missionary institute with the church here on Lord's day, June 12. Great interest was manifested. The house was filled every night, and much good was done. Can very heartily recommend Bro. Waggoner to any church desiring work of this kind.—JOHN CLARK, minister.

Hamilton.—Five added here June 12. Five added June 19. Fine interest in our regular meetings.—Sunday-school exceeded its apportionment.—A. M. GROWDEN.

OKLAHOMA.

Lexington, June 17.—We are assisting Evangelist G. T. Black, of Ardmore, I. T., in a meeting at this place. The work starts nicely, good attendance, etc. We hope to make a good report of our meeting here.—F. HOWARD SWEETMAN and WIFE.

Kingfisher, June 21.—We closed the Sunday-school revival Sunday with 204 pupils. Began about March 1 with 134. Sister Nellie Moore is back home for a few weeks. We loaned her to Oklahoma City this spring, where she served as chorister for Brother Dutcher in a very efficient way.—ISOM ROBERTS, pastor.

Cushing, June 20.—Meeting one week old. Eight additions to date, four confessions, one from Baptists and three from Methodists. We have secured a tent which will seat over 1,000, which we shall raise to-morrow. We shall continue so long as interest requires.—OSCAR INGOLD.

OREGON.

Eugene, June 20.—At my regular appointment yesterday at Santa Clara S. H., one confession, who will be immersed and take membership with the First church here. Am in my third year at Santa Clara.—A. F. LINN.

Portland, June 14.—Since last report we have had 28 additions to the First church, eight of whom were by confession and baptism. The work in the various departments of the church is moving along nicely. Raised $50 for home missions, just twice as much as was given last year.—E. S. MUCKLEY.

TEXAS.

Greenville, June 20.—Four added in our regular work here yesterday, two by confession and two by letter. This makes 67 additions in the last two months.—J. W. HOLSPLE.

Cooper, June 20.—The meeting here is one week old. Fine audiences all the time; tent more than filled last night. Twelve additions to date—eight by confession and baptism and four by statement. Will open subscriptions for a new church to-day.—JOHN A. STEVENS, A. C. M. S. evangelist.

Cleburne, June 20.—We had one addition yesterday by letter. Our work is promising for the future.—J. G. CREASON.

Mineral Wells, June 23.—My report as evangelist for the Mineral Wells Texas district for the year ending May 31 shows: Sermons, 365; additions by baptism, 73; by statement, 42; otherwise, 6; churches planted, 2; Sunday-schools, 5; cash raised for all purposes, $1,239.35; pledges in all, $935.10; letters written, 648; Bibles and other books sold, 180; tracts sold, 174; tracts given away about 1,000; subscriptions to our papers, 198.—S. A. THOMAS.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Parkersburg, June 23.—Two by letter Lord's day, June 19; one by confession and baptism and one from the Methodists at prayer meeting last night, making 100 added in nine months.—J. D. HULL.

You Can Go to the World's Fair FOR NOTHING.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

Will pay your way and entertain you here. All that is necessary is a little work before you come. We are planning to largely increase the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and we know you will be pleased to help in this work. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is worthy of a much larger circulation than it now enjoys, and we appeal to you to aid us in this extension and we will cheerfully send you to the World's Fair free and pay your expenses while here.

Anyone who will secure sixty-seven new annual subscribers at the regular rate of $1.50 per annum for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will receive, Free, a Round Trip R. R. ticket to the World's Fair and $3.00 a day for entertainment for ten days.

Anyone who will secure fifty-six new annual subscribers at the regular rate of $1.50 per annum for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will receive, Free, a Round Trip R. R. ticket to the World's Fair and $2.00 a day for entertainment for ten days.

Anyone who will secure forty-eight new annual subscribers at the regular rate of $1.50 per annum for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will receive, Free, a Round Trip R. R. ticket to the World's Fair and $1.00 a day for entertainment for ten days.

You cannot lose in this contest. Anyone who will try can secure at least forty-eight subscribers to so popular a paper as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If you cannot secure them all in your own congregation, neighboring churches will help you out. What a double delight it would be for you to send your pastor on this basis or his good wife, or possibly both.

Here is an opportunity to take in the National Convention. Fill the homes of your brethren with the best of Christian literature and then come to both the National Convention and the World's Fair without cost. This is the opportunity of a lifetime, and we trust that many will embrace it and begin work at once.

Write to us at once and begin work among your friends without delay. They may have put you off before, but when you speak to them of your object they will help you out. Do not fail to write us without delay and tell us of your intention, and we will send particulars. Address,

You couldn't ride the cow;
An' the rabbits an' the pig
Don't like you 'cause you're big.
I'm comfortblest now;
P'raps I am a goose.
I don't want to be no older:
What's the use?

What's the use o' growin' up?
When yer growed, why, every day
You just have to be one thing.
I'm a pirate, er a king,
Er a cowboy—I can play
That I'm anything I choose.
I don't want to be no older:
What's the use?

Two Boys in One Jacket.

By the Rev. Amelia A. Frost.

"Hi! Yah! Come see the kid with a baby's hand!" Distress flushed the little fellow's handsome face. His big, dark eyes snapped with anger as he quickly thrust the deformed hand behind him and backed up against the school house.

"Jiggers and bumblebees! Look's if he wanted ter fight," shouted the same rough voice.

By this time a crowd of children stood in front of the young stranger as he bravely faced his persecutors and choked the tears back.

"What's his name, Don?" asked another boy. "Say, bub, what's yer name, and where'd you come from?" he continued.

"Oh! I know his name," piped a girl's voice. "It's Wilbur Sherman. I heard him tell teacher this morning."

"He's moved into the house next to mine, and there's a sick woman—his mother, I guess," added another.

Wilbur's lip quivered but he straightened up. As he did so a clinking sound caught the ear of his first tormentor.

"Say, kiddie, what's them irons on yer legs for? Ter make yer run fast? Lost yer tongue? Here! Show up yer fightin' hand!" and he roughly seized the rigid arm to bring forward the tiny misshapen hand.

Like a flash Wilbur doubled his strong fist and dealt a stunning blow between the eyes of the larger boy. It was so sharp and unexpected that Don Porter was dazed for an instant. The astonished crowd quickly parted in front of the two boys. Wilbur, his little heart pounding, his face burning, his eyes blinded with tears that would push into them, made a dash for the street. The stiff irons, worn to straighten his ankles, made it harder for him to run. In spite of the irons he had to run on the sides of his feet. But he could run faster than most boys of ten. Before the astonished Don realized what had befallen him, Wilbur was some distance down the street.

"Won't he get a poundin'? Jest let me ketch him!" exclaimed the furious Don as he felt the bunch on his forehead and started after the runner with both fists in fighting trim. Several children were close at his heels, excited and curious to see what would come of it. They were not prepared for what did come.

Wilbur sped toward Main street. Without taking cross walks he rushed heedlessly into the broad square, dodging wheels and horses with the skill early acquired by every city boy. Electrics had no terror for him, and so he hurried on to cross in front of the one approaching. But one of the poor uncertain feet gave a sudden twist and sent him headlong. The motorman checked his car, but not soon enough. The prostrate boy was struck on the head. A big policeman tenderly lifted the unconscious child in his arms.

"I am his mother's physician," said a kindly voice. "Here, officer, get into my carriage, we'll take him home. Poor little fellow! His crippled body doesn't match his courage. This street is no place for him. Here, boy," he added to one standing near, "jump in next the officer, and let the legs rest on your knees."

The boy was Don Porter. He had come up just in time to see the accident. Hot and angry, at first he felt glad when his enemy fell. But a feeling of terror quickly followed. He would have snatched Wilbur off the track had there been time. But now for an instant the thought flashed: "What'll the fellers say to see me a-helpin' to get him home?" It was only an instant. He took the place as directed, and carefully lifted the iron-bound legs to his lap. The carriage had rubber tires, the doctor drove carefully, and they soon reached the house.

Quickly hitching his horse the doctor went in without ringing, as was his custom. With a few words he quieted the fears of Mrs. Sherman. The big officer took the injured boy into the house. The door was shut, and Don was left to think it all over.

Slowly he walked down the street. The picture of that white, still face on the policeman's arm, and the tiny deformed hand held so tenderly in the great strong fingers, kept right before his eyes. He could still feel the weight of those limp little legs in the iron frames across his knees. The doctor said Wilbur was not dead, but what if he should die? Who was to blame for it all?

"He was a plucky chap to hit me like that—only one hand, and no feet to speak of; wonder if he'll die," said the unhappy boy to himself.

Don's supper didn't taste good that night. The boys played football on the green without him. He was glad to get by himself into the woodshed and split kindlings. It gave him a chance to think. Early in the evening he crept off to bed. It was long before he could get to sleep. The big brave eyes of Wilbur Sherman kept staring at him in the dark. He could see the tears, and it made him choke. Why didn't he tease a boy of his own size with two hands and strong feet? What could he do to show he wasn't so mean as it looked?

There was his flower garden, and the money he had earned for a fishing-rod, and the collie pups, and his rabbits. At last he went to sleep.

When Mrs. Sherman's Bridget was setting the table for breakfast next morning, she heard a knock at the kitchen door. There she found a frightened-looking boy with his hands behind him.

"Is he dead?" was the boy's anxious greeting.

"An' is it Wilbur yez be axin' about? The saints be praised an' he's livin', but it's a sorry time the darlint's been havin' all night wid his ravin's about the b'y that do be pokin' fun at his little hand. If yez know the varmint, jist bring him in sight o' Bridget Mahoney!"

"Here—give him these!" interrupted Don, as he thrust a great handful of sweet-peas toward her and hurried away.

"Now isn't he the foine lad a-bringin' the swate posies wid kisses o' the mornin' all shinin' on their purty faces!" muttered Bridget as she watched him turn the corner. "Sure and I'll put 'em on the table furninst the little bed!" and she tiptoed to the sick room.

"What if he should die? What if he should die?" kept pushing itself in among Don's "map questions" and "miscellaneous examples" that day. Lessons went hard, and he was glad when school was over.

As Bridget stepped out of the back door with her ash-pan next morning, Don came up the walk.

"Hello!" said she, and tilted her pan on the edge of the barrel. "It's Wilbur yez be wantin' to know about, an it's meself wud be glad to say he's better, but fax thin I'd be lyin' to yez. The poor head of him is swelled to the size o' two, wid a face as black as the kitchen stove. He doesn't know anybody, and the docther can't tell which way it'll be turnin' wid him."

"I—I'd like—if he"—stammered Don. "Here's one o' my"—and he passed Bridget a small basket containing the dearest thing he owned—a handsome collie pup—then turned, and was out of sight before the astonished girl had time to set down her ash-pan.

The doctor soon found signs of improvement in Wilbur. Don came to the back door every morning to hear news from the sick boy, and always left some small treasure, but wouldn't tell Bridget his name.

One day, a fortnight after the accident, Don was mowing the lawn for a neighbor on the next street. Suddenly a voice called, "Porter! Don Porter! Come here!" He looked up and saw a group of boys on the opposite sidewalk. Dropping his mower he started toward them.

"Come on!" called another voice. "Here's a whole circus!"

Just then beyond the group he espied Wilbur Sherman. It was the first time Don had seen him since the scene that for a fortnight had been haunting him—Wilbur with pale pleading face backed against the fence by thoughtless boys, trying to hide the queer little hand from cruel questioners.

Like a flash the two boys in Don's jacket met for a tussle. Should he join the persecutors? He couldn't do that. Should he make some excuse and go back to his work? He couldn't do that. Should he openly take Wilbur's part? That was the thing to do, but what would the boys say? This battle was ended in about two steps. He braced up and hurried toward them. Poor Wilbur looked more terror-stricken when he saw Don. Something dreadful would surely happen to him now.

"Here, you fellows! Let him alone! Take a chap yer own size. Say, kiddie! Come an' watch me mow the lawn!" These were the words Don flung out to the astonished group as he pushed his way among them. They were too surprised to resist him if they wanted to.

Wilbur was dazed. He knew it was Don Porter he had struck two weeks ago for teasing him. But this Don—with an arm over his shoulder, taking his part, leading him across the street—was it another Don?—The Sunday-School Times.

Some Homespun Theology.

BY R. BURT DOAN.

Our preacher preached a sermon
A week or two ago.
About the "Grandeur of our Plea"—
Quite doctrinal, you know.

An' he told us how our fathers
Prayed an' preached and taught;
How they suffered many hardships,
An' in faith and courage wrought.

That the church might be united
On the Father's blessed Word,
Leavin' party names and precepts
For the wishes of our Lord,

That we all might join together
In the unity divine,
That He'd had with God His Father
Ere the first of earth an' time.

Then he told us how the Bible
Is the only rule an' guide
Fer the Christian life to follow,
An' that them who turn aside

Fer human creeds and doctrines
Are a shoulderin' up a load
That the Lord has never meant fer man
To carry up the road.

An' since they caused division,
An' often were agin
The plainest teachin' of the Word,
They amouned to a sin.

Then he urged us to be zealous
Fer the message of our Lord,
An' proclaim the mighty gospel
Till the heathen hear the Word

An' send back a mighty answer
From the millions saved an' won
From a life of sin and sorrow
To the Father's risen Son.

Now, I tell you what—that sermon
Jest thrilled me o'er and o'er,
An' made me prouder of our plea
Than I'd ever been before.

But since I've been a-thinkin'
About a thing or two,
I've come to the conclusion
That we've something more to do

Than simply braggin' 'bout our plea
An' provin' by the Book
That we are jest exactly right
An' others are mistook

In what they've settled on fer truth,
An' now I've come to say
That if we do the Lord's commands
We've got to take his way.

We've got to preach the gospel,
Both strong an' fully, too,
An' back our preachin' up with deeds
To show our words are true.

An' after that we've got to get
The other folks to see
That the Master's prayer fer unity
Is answered in our plea.

Can we do this by tellin' them
That we are right, an' they,
By holdin' on to human creeds
Are sinnin' grace away?

There's some of them that love the Lord
As fervently as we,
An' think that they are servin' him
As honest as can be.

Do you think they'll ever be convinced
By bein' thrashed and mauled?
Was that the way the Savior did
When he taught the Jews of old?

Or Paul at Athens? Did he rail?
And tell 'em they was fools,
An' that they didn't know a thing
In spite of all their schools?

That the blessed gospel is a club
Has never yet been said,
An' besides, you can't convert a man
By poundin' of his head.

Paul said it is a power,
An a power so divine
That it can change the destiny
Of your poor soul an' mine.

Then let the power have its way,
Backed up by Christian love,
Delivered in the spirit sweet
Of Him who reigns above.

Fer jest as sure as God is God
An' truth is truth, we'll see
The prayer our blessed Master prayed
Will fully answered be.

Then let us see our duty clear,
To keep the Lord's commands
To save the sinner, help the weak,
Uphold the helpless hands,

An' pray the prayer that Jesus prayed
With spirit sweet as his,
An' trust the Lord fer our results,
Whose all the glory is.

An' when we reach the golden streets,
Within the city fair,
He'll fill our hearts with endless joy,
An' crown us victors there.

The Timid Child.

By Lily Rice Foxcroft.

The extraordinary boldness of certain crimes that have lately shocked the public sense, and the state of nervous alarm into which whole communities have been thrown by them, suggests the question whether children's tremors are not often treated with less sympathy than they deserve. The child is shy of going upstairs alone in the dusk, and is heard painfully closing the doors that lead to unoccupied rooms if he must go to bed by himself, and pitiless questioning drags from him the confession that he is "afraid there might be somebody in there." Night after night the same thing happens, and the grown people are out of patience. "But there might be somebody there," persists the child.

And who can gainsay him? No horror is impossible; the worst that imagination can picture has been realized; it is only the infrequency, the improbability of the stealthy, brutal and murderous that gives to the mature mind such security as it enjoys—leaving out of the question that trust in providence in which we surely should not expect our children to surpass ourselves. But the child does not repose himself so easily upon the law of averages and per cents. One hideous story, heard in an unlucky moment, will depress his nerves more than weeks of reasoning and expostulation can stimulate them.

Grown people—women, at least—share this experience. A woman of good intelligence and ordinary force of mind admitted to a neighbor the other day that in thirty years she had never shaken off the dislike to going down cellar alone which reading the newspaper account of a crime committed in a cellar had once given her. To her great surprise, her friend, whom she looked up to as vastly her superior in courage, confessed to the same feeling, dating from precisely the same cause. Can children be blamed for their sensitiveness to impressions so powerful upon stronger minds?

Opinions will always differ as to the best way of overcoming timidity. But there is a good deal to be said in favor of approaching it, like so many faults, by indirection; building up the general tone of the mind in all sorts of wholesome ways, in preference to keeping the attention fixed steadily on the weakness itself, which, oftener than not, only increases it. Time gradually softens impressions; new subjects of thought displace the haunting dread; the example of others inspires courage; and almost before the anxious father and mother realize it, the timid child is grown into a man or woman of average fortitude and endurance.

It is about as safe to trust to natural processes like these as to try to force the growth of that courage which in a sensitive, imaginative child is almost heroism. Such forcing puts a tremendous strain on young powers. The relief to a child's mind when sympathy, cheer and the promise of companionship are substituted for censure and stimulus is often touchingly apparent. The simple use of, "Be sure to call mother if you feel afraid in the night, dear," as a bedtime formula in place of, "Be a brave girl if you wake up to-night, and don't disturb anyone else," may bring nights of tranquil sleep in place of dreams, nightmares and a nervous condition bordering on hysteria.

The Green Witch.

Presently George started as from a spell. "How do you do it?" he cried admiringly. "Oh, you are a genius! You make the very stream sing with you. And I seem to hear the falling of the leaves in your voice. But what thought in your heart is like a flower?"

"I cannot tell you that."

"It must be a bright thought," he said, "for you sing as if you love it."

"I do love it," said Marget, "it has made a better girl of me."

"Yet you say the hope can never be," George persisted.

"That is why the tear comes to Marget's eye," she answered softly.

"Don't give up any good hope, Marget," said the other earnestly. "I know from my own life that the harder time a person has, the more he must cling to his hopes. His mind should live with them and become so intimate with bright thoughts, that poverty and hardships and privations will just seem passing acquaintances. Why did you say we will not meet again? I don't like that thought, at all!"

"Don't you? It is good of you not to like it. Oh, let us hate it together!" cried Marget with a little rippling laugh that sounded like a bar of sweet, minor melody. "But I'm afraid it is true. You are going far away, and long before you came back, my place in the tent will be empty. I do not know what will become of Marget, and there will be few to care—so few!"

"What a lonely life you have led," cried George, "not to make friends to care for you!"

"Maybe some of the fault is mine," she answered, sadly. "I despised the children I was thrown with, because I felt them beneath me; and those I could have loved despised me, on account of pa and the dragging-down of our lives. Oh," cried Marget, "to have entered the bright homes as an equal—for I am an equal in spirit, and in birth! But I was shut out—I lived outside the door—you can't know what I mean. It made me wicked. When I crept to the window in the gloom to listen to sweet music, I loved the music but not always those who played and sang. For they would have laughed at me—they would have despised me. I was the girl a drunken father chased and beat. I was Tuck Hootin's idle, untidy, lazy daughter. I didn't care. I mean, I had that feeling of not caring. I called myself 'Marget Hootin,' and made it harder for people to like me. I put the worst side of my nature before everybody. My life was miserable, and I would do nothing to make it less so, feeling it was not my fault."

"But you are not that way, now," George interrupted eagerly.

"No. Do you remember my saying there were times when I couldn't sing? It was when these thoughts took possession of me,—like devils such as the Bible tells about. I am better now. It helps me because I have stopped thinking so much about myself and my troubles. I have other thoughts, now."

"But you are not that way, now," George interrupted eagerly.

Look Pleasant By All Means.

There is No Dyspepsia Behind This Face.

A cheerful appearance is a good thing. People will go out of their way to give the fellow a lift who always wears a pleasant expression, but the man with a cranky disposition and long face always meets with an indifferent if not a chilly reception.

But you can't look pleasant, if you have dyspepsia. It is out of the question, it has been tried too often.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets

guarantee a smiling face. They cure dyspepsia at all times and under all conditions. They relieve the stomach of its work, properly digest the food, themselves, compel perfect assimilation of the food nutriment and bring about, in a natural manner, a sound and healthy condition. The stomach being relieved of all work gets well and strong and the face responds and reflects the genuine pleasure that follows. Thousands of bad stomachs have been put right and thousands of long faces filled with gladness and joy by the great and unfailing work of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

"Like flowers!" cried George sympathetically.

"One is like a flower," she replied gently.

"Add to your flower-thoughts the thought of God as your dear Father," said George timidly. "That will be like sweet-violets among roses."

"I love sweet-violets" said Marget.

"They were my mother's favorite flowers," George murmured, as if to himself.

The word had scarcely been spoken when he was startled by a hissing in the air above his head, like the warning of a serpent. Something fell about him, fastening his arms to his side so securely that he could not move them. Then came a violent wrench which threw him to the ground. His face, in his fall, struck against a rope which was drawn taut. A loop had been cast over him from behind. He was dragged across the clearing to a tree, while Marget's voice rang out in terror.

"I promised to trim you, I did!" came the hoarse voice of drunken Tuck Hootin. George struggled desperately to free himself, but the rope was wrapped round and round him and the tree, till he was powerless. He sat upon the ground, his back secured against the rough trunk. Before him hovered a wild form, which the darkness rendered doubly formidable. "I've got you at last, I have!" said Tuck with a drunken chuckle. "I'll keep my promise, for I'm a gentleman of my word, I am. I'm going to trim you, George Clayton. I'm going to trim the fellow that stole my job from me. I'm going to trim the villain that comes here in the woods to talk to my daughter. You can't see this knife—I wish it wasn't so dark so you could, for this knife is what's going to do the trimming!"

The Advance Society.

In the meantime, people are still reading five pages of history, thirty lines of poetry and memorizing a good quotation each week; they are reading a verse in the Bible every day and keeping an account of work done in a note book. That's the Advance society, and here is our new honor list: Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo. (4th quarter); Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill. (5th quarter); Mabel G. Damerell, Walnut, Kan. (7th quarter); Jessie Underwood, Boyd, Ore. (2d quarter); May Speece, Bucklin, Mo. (7th quarter); Susie C. Searce, Plattsburg, Mo. (7th quarter); Jean Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (8th quarter); Nannie D. Chambers (is it the 20th? You forgot to tell); and have I left anybody out?

If there is a member of the Advance society who feels that this picture is that of a stranger, I hope after this all will feel that he is a friend. For this is our Advance society orphan, Charlie. We have gone to the expense of having the picture made because I wanted all of you to see him and become acquainted. I introduce you now; and if the picture doesn't smile, it's because it's made out of copper. Charlie would smile at you, I know, for he has a kind and gentle heart, and is happy-hearted, although if you were placed as he is you might be sad. It's all the more credit to him that he doesn't grieve over what can't be helped. Don't you want to do something to make his life happier? But wait—I will tell you about him. It's just like a story, only it's all true. It begins right now. In 1901 Mr. Hughes and Mrs. Orr kept a grocery store in Carthage, Mo. One day a family moved next door to them; it consisted of a woman and two children, and it should have consisted of a man, too, but he had deserted the family long ago. He was no account anyhow, so I expect that was the very best thing he could have done. Well, the family was so very poor that the mother had to take in washing. Her health was bad, but she kept the children neat and sent them to school. Mrs. Orr was pleased to see that when the children came to the store, they always had clean hands and faces and carefully-kept clothes. The mother was so poor that in winter time she couldn't afford enough fuel to keep her warm, and many a time she did her washing while her clothes were frozen upon her from morning till evening. She was so anxious for her little boy and girl to be educated and grow up to be a fine man and a noble woman, that she toiled on till consumption brought her at last to her bed, where her dying hours were tormented by the fear of Charlie and Bessie being sent to the poorhouse. She told Mr. and Mrs. Hughes that if they would look after the children, she would die in peace. She died—it was three years ago, and they kept their promise. Charlie was then nine. His knee was in a terrible condition—softening of the bone. He suffered greatly, and at times could not put his foot to the floor. The doctor said if the leg were not cut off, he would die. After the mother's death, Mr. and Mrs. Hughes persuaded the county court to pay Charlie's way to a Kansas City hospital, where the operation was performed free of charge. (There are lots of good men in the world.) Mr. Hughes stood right by his side while the limb was being cut off, and took three trips to Kansas City afterwards to see how the orphan was getting along. Don't you think you would like that man? I never saw him, as I said before, and he's no kin, but I think he's a rather scarce kind of a man, don't you? Charlie was brave and stood the operation well, and when he was strong enough they tried to find him a home. There's where more trouble began. Nobody wanted him. You see, many people are willing to take orphans to raise, but they want pretty little girls or big, strong, sturdy boys—they are looking after themselves and their orphan at the same time. But now Charlie has only one leg; the other is cut off away up above the knee—and so nobody would take him. After trying and trying, the hospital board found him a place in the Whittaker orphans' home, at Pryor Creek, Ind. Ter. Do you know what "Ind. Ter." stands for? I'll tell you; it stands for the place where they were willing to take in a little Missouri waif when no Missouri home could be found for him. There he stayed two years with the Indians (Mr. Whittaker is part Indian himself), getting no education or refinement or delicate thoughts—just existing with the little red and white orphans of Indian Territory. At last the home was without funds, and they sent Charlie to Carthage again. Mrs. Orr kept him two months while many attempts were made to find him a home. The answer was always the same, "We don't want cripples, and he is too old." He was sent to Neosho, but nobody there would care for him, so he was returned to Carthage and thence returned to Indian Territory. From there he was sent to a home just started by a lady who was not very wise to start anything, it would appear, as she soon ran out of money and was obliged to get rid of the boy the best way she could. At this time he was about to starve, and there was no one to care for him but God. So they talked about sending him to the poorhouse, where he would have remained, no doubt, all his life. But Mr. Hughes heard of the orphans' home at St. Louis and appealed to them. That is where Charlie is now. They took him in, though under ordinary circumstances his age (12) would have debarred him. So I think that home is Christian in other things besides its name, don't you?

So that is the story of our Advance society orphan No. 2—you'll remember little Joe has found a beautiful home of his own. Now, who will help with Charlie—I mean besides those who have already helped? Of course, what you paid for little Joe goes right on with Charlie; but we hope to receive enough to be a blessing to him—to keep him in clothes, buy his crutches, send him on a summer visit and to the World's Fair, and in short, take care of him. Don't you want to help? Then where's your dime or your quarter? I forgot to say Charlie's little sister is provided for. Mrs. Orr writes: "She is such a sweet, pretty little girl, and so refined in her manners."

Nellie and May Speece, Bucklin, Mo., both send a dime for Charlie, and letters which we hope to print soon. From Lawson, Mo., comes 50 cents. I haven't been able to print the names of those who have sent money, because we've had so much "Green Witch," but I will do so; just wait and see. Wish I had more names to print!

Business Notes.

This is the last week of the Bargain Books. No orders filled after July 2.

All ordering "Tidings of Salvation" at $1 per dozen, prepaid, are well pleased, and well they may be, at the price, considering the book.

Life of Judge J. S. Black sold out, and only a few of Life of L. L. Pinkerton remain, and when gone you are left; 35 cents while they last.

We are not a "tract distributing people," but should be, and will gladly send our tract circular to all inquirers. In meetings they are not surpassed.

No more McGarvey on Mark, and it is useless to order them, but call for Matthew and Mark (McGarvey), or Luke, Lamar, slightly damaged, at 50 cents.

The "Wedding Booklets" and "Wedding Blossoms" at 50 cents each are two of the happiest ideas in wedding certificates we have ever put out, and are giving unbounded satisfaction.

We are still booking orders for the Revised New Testament in limp cloth at 7 cents, in full cloth at 15 cents, and in primer type at 35 cents, postpaid, and these will soon be exhausted.

By the way, in going over stock, we found a few copies of Matthew and Mark, by McGarvey, and of Luke by Lamar, slightly damaged, and will let these go while they last at 50 cents per copy.

We have sold the last of "Johnson on John" at the 50 cent rate, but will be glad to fill all future orders at the regular rate for John, or Luke or Matthew and Mark at $1.50 each, while Hebrews and Romans may go at the same price.

The Normal Instructor, by Dowling, is now in seven numbers, and all are giving good satisfaction to the teaching force of the country, as all of Dowling's work does, and we are sending them out at 15 cents each, or $1.50 per dozen, postpaid.

All our friends are surprised at the "bargains" proffered in the book offers, many of which will surely be withdrawn at the end of the 30 days, having now only one week more to run. No more $2 John Smith at 50
